GREAT SCOTT GAMES

No one really pays attention to the guy tickling the ivories. We see it all through the smoke filled rooms. The sound of the familiar knock leads into this swanky wonderland. The underlying tension in the air... Wondering if at any second some guy is gonna jump up and announce they're the fuzz and break up the joint. Still anyone in the know is here every night. No one paying notice to the musicians has its advantages, you get a good view of everyone. In the corner sits the alderman, nothing sticks on the man. He seems to be able to handle anything that comes his way. At table next to him is the Boxer that no one seems to be able to beat. His fists do the talking however his brains... Well, they must have gotten knocked out early in his career. He's surrounded by the regular flappers trying to work on the big lug to get a bit of cush to carry them through the thin nights. Would love to think the crowd is filled with jakes who are only just wanting to have a good time: Drink some hooch and listen to me play for them. However, that's never quite the case.

The lights dim and she gets on the stage. Jeweled and dolled up from her current big cheese. This dame ain't no ordinary canary. All she has to do is smile and say a few words to get them wrapped around her little finger. It ain't natural. Yet, I keep my trap shut. Some say the feds grab up people like that but most think that's baloney. Not me, though. She and I aren't so different. When I play that piano I see sets of hands that are not my own. The songs played by dozens of musicians before me in this smoky lounge. I feel myself being pulled into the present and watching the singer step off the stage, making her way to a specific table, the entire audience entranced. Glancing at her hand I can see a ring on her delicate digit, the same one I see in my mind when I play the keys... I wonder what she has in store for these poor schmucks. The night is young, and anything could happen. Me? Well I keep my nose clean. After all you just gotta play the game.

WELCOME TO MOONSHINE

"I wouldn't go so far as to say I've got a plan. But I've got an idea. It's a very useful thing sometimes, an idea."

-Agatha Christie, The Secret of Chimneys

The Roaring Twenties. The Mad Era. America shed its cloak of grief. One Hundred and Seventeen Thousand United States Soldiers went across the pond to fight a war and never returned home. The pain and loss had made way to a time of excess and extravagance. We buried our sorrow and alcohol and frivolity.

As irresponsible as it sounds, it also ushered in the shedding of previously held "moral" codes and social conventions. Taboos were the norm. An age of Expression and Invention was born. Poets, Dreamers, and The Ambitious were the true leaders. Flappers and Mobsters became The Layman's aristocracy. As F. Scott Fitzgerald said in The Great Gatsby we thrived "Among The Whispers, The Champagne and The Stars" We as a nation had tasted a new type of freedom and reveled in it. So much so that those in power did the only thing they felt they could. They took away what they thought was the cause of immorality and the destruction of American Values. Alcohol. Yet Prohibition did not stamp out the use of Devil's Juice. We learned to hide in the shadows, find back alley passages and used secret knocks to keep our lifestyle alive. We danced and lived in the dark and gave each other knowing glances in the daylight.

Criminals became our emissaries. The Law was more our enemy than ever before. We smuggled in whatever we could. And when stock got low, we became inventive and created Moonshine.

Moonshine is the world you are about to step into. Where everyone is human yet your ambitions and talents have the ability to make you exceptional. A world where intrigue and mayhem awaits. A place where the "What if's" and "That doesn't seem possible" are commonly muttered. A society in which extraordinary abilities, superstitions, things that go bump in the night and occult beliefs might just be your reality. This would depend on which path you wish to walk down. Will you lead, follow, find success, get cornered or hustled? Who knows for sure. We dare you to find out....

SETTING

In Moonshine, you inhabit a character living the city life in the late 1920s. This world is much like the American cities of the time, with prohibition, corruption, intrigue, and more. The biggest difference between our world and the world of Moonshine is that there are a small number of people with psychic abilities. They are often quite minor, and very rare. Most people don't believe in the supernatural, and a talented charlatan can fake extrasensory capabilities. The feds, however, are aware of the truth, and if a psychic starts to make too much noise, they might just disappear. The system embraces the enchantment of noir, urban crime, moral ambiguity and often fatalism with a touch of mystery and perhaps romance.

Each character created in Moonshine has the ability to have skills and abilities that set them apart from the rest. Psychically, mentally, and socially. You might have a combination of skills and abilities that make you the most sought after gumshoe, or a songbird that holds their audience in the palm of their hands. However, your character will also have flaws that may cause problems and cause one to twitch at things that go bump in the night or put their foot in their mouth in front of important people.

Note: In our real history, the 1920s were a time wrought with bigotry. In Moonshine, you can play a version of the 1920s without this painful aspect of history. If you do wish to engage with those themes at your table, please be sure to talk to your table and make sure everyone is comfortable with those topics.

Prohibition

I could kill for a good drink... and I might have to.

The Volstead Act. The 18th amendment. Section 3: Prohibition of Manufacture and Sale:

"No person shall on or after the date when the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States goes into effect, manufacture, sell, barter, transport, import, export, deliver, furnish or possess any intoxicating liquor except as authorized in this Act..."

A movement led by The Temperance Society. The Anti-saloon League and Andrew Volstead. In truth in trying to suppress alcohol it lit a fire that blazed out of control for over a decade. The illegal use or distribution of alcohol only made the desire for it burn. Most major cities ignored the act behind closed doors. Opening speak-easies, smuggling and allowing organized crime to become one of the highest tiers of power for over a decade.

Prohibition was the fuse on the powder keg, everyone hated it, and quick thinkers realized it was a golden opportunity to make a killing. Plenty of killing happens over it too, with conflicts between rival gangs and law enforcement rising as fast as profits, and away from legal regulations plenty of people get poisoned by going to the wrong speakeasy and being served industrial alcohol. Small time gangs have bloomed into criminal empires spanning the entire country nearly overnight, and there's never been a higher public disregard for law. Whether it was thumbing one's nose at them or greasing their hands.

There was a spirit of both disillusionment and innovation. Perhaps it was the end of the war that made citizens feel like living life in the norm seemed no longer appealing. Whatever it was, the Roaring 20's was the time to reinvent the wheel. Be braver than we have ever been.

Most major cities had their own niche that set them apart from each other. Yet, all tied by the illegal distribution of alcohol and its effects. In Moonshine each city will display what they are known for. From the obvious such as Chicago to the mysteries of New Orleans.

As a society we turned our heads to the violence and destruction caused by organized crime. What else could the Average Joe do? The parties though? Can't beat 'em, they're events to die for.

Society

It's called the roaring twenties, not the mewling twenties. Go wild.

The 1920s of Moonshine are of a more romanticized sort. The jazz is jazzier, the gangsters and gumshoes are easier to root for, and the party is most definitely never going to stop. Business is booming even if union membership is falling, capitalism marches on as the Communist Party of America is forced to re-brand as the Worker's Party following the Red Scare and deportation of key figures.

Women, having gained the right to vote, challenged accepted gender roles. "Flappers" emerged. Dames radically cutting their short hair into bobs, short dazzling dresses covered in sequins and gems that would more than likely get you kicked out of Sunday services. Glamorous makeup, smoking and drinking. Women were no longer accepted to sit demurely in a corner and whisper in polite conversation. They could be loud, boisterous and opinionated. This forced more liberal attitudes toward women and social behavior. Suddenly becoming a Femme Fatale wasn't such a bad thing.

This was the age of the rise of radio and motion pictures. First silent films then "talkies". Between the shift in hard nose journalism to sensationalism the Roaring 20's birthed the first national celebrities, sports heroes, and movie stars. Society followed suit mimicking what they would see on the silver screen or hear on the radio. This helped spread new fashions and consumer desires in a way that the world hadn't before. Because there was mass production. Society shifted toward a culture of consumption, purchasing new appliances and luxury goods. Suddenly, things seen on the screen could be bought in catalogs or in shops. If you couldn't afford it, no problem! The availability of credit, installment plans seemed to be available to just about everyone. People who had average lives by day could transform themselves into looking like sophisticated aristocrats by night.

Sadly, because of "The Great War" our soldier boys that came back were different. Their ideals were shattered brought on by the reality of trench warfare, poison gas, and mass casualties of both brother and enemy. The same grand patriotic slogans that made them line up to hold a gun suddenly felt hollow, pointless, and left many feeling betrayed.

Gertrude Stein called this era of society "The Lost Generation" because of the feeling of disillusionment, it brought on a sense of aimlessness. This made way for a shift toward hedonism or reckless pleasure-seeking, a desire to "eat, drink, and be merry" because the future was uncertain. However, the boys are still home and that's as good a reason to celebrate as any.

Organized Crime

There's family and then there's the family

While the majority public opinion see many mobsters as rock stars and folk heroes, the truth tends to be a little darker. As charismatic as they can be, there is no mafioso who is a stranger to murder and extortion. Bootlegging has turned these once small-time gangs into underworld empires, and their relatives the new royalty. While talk of their code of honor being alive and well is certainly spread around, there's no denying that these families use their newfound wealth to bribe, coerce, and corrupt their way through any 'legitimate' body of law and order in order to get what they want.

Some major cities that didn't have the typical cigar smoking suited criminals. Organized crime sometimes came in the form of Labor Racketeers. Gangs who infiltrated and took control of labor unions in industries like trucking, construction, and the clothing trade. They would extort money from both the business owners, usually in the form of threatening strikes or violence and the union members by collecting "protection" fees or dues.

Groups of "Financiers" who would clean dirty money or fix the odds when it came to making a bet. Manipulate sports games and boxing matches by offering to make their pockets a bit heavier if they "assisted" in the odds

Some cities had criminals that hid behind a heritage group or preservation societies that strong-armed local politicians to make laws and ordinances that gave them the power and leeway to do just about anything they wanted in their cities.

In all cases this made urban violence a thing of the norm. People became desensitized to shoot outs, bank robberies and bodies lying on the floor.

In the words of Al Capone, "You can go a long way with a smile. You can go a lot farther with a smile and a gun."

The Cops

They're officers of the law, but whose law exactly are they enforcing?

There's no shortage of folks who join up with the fuzz out of the goodness of their hearts with a desire to do justice and protect the weak and helpless. Unfortunately there's a lot more that are just another face in a rotten batch. Their presence is usually enough to keep the common crooks and hooligans away and the hearts of the general populace at ease.

Making alcohol illegal overwhelmed local law enforcement. Also every time there was a raid there was someone waiting at the door to either grease your palm or intimidate you into cooperating. The mob and gangs were more dangerous than ever before. The police were nearly always out gunned when it came to confrontation. Their double-action revolvers were no match for Tommy guns.

The police weren't super heroes. Wide eyed rookies wanting to make a difference were quickly given a dose of reality. If they stood in the mob's way then they wouldn't be left standing for long. After a while it was common knowledge that the police were operating with a "if you can't beat them join them" mentality. Sadly, because of their lack of regulation when it came to organized crime, they came down hard on the common criminal. Often going too far when it came to arrest and interrogation.

Every badge is in somebody else's pocket, even if they don't know it yet. The more seasoned coppers at times took it a few steps more. Getting false confessions and fall guys to deter the Feds from coming to investigate them. Political machines, seedy bureaucrats, mobsters with deep pockets, it's anyone's guess who an officer is going to report to when the band plays 'dixie.'

The Feds

You know things have gone South when the FBI get involved.

It doesn't matter who you are, if the Feds ever get involved with something it's bad for business. The cops lose their authority, criminals have to face off against law enforcement with more resources, and everyone has to be a bit more careful about heading to the speakeasy. They are led by J. Edgar Hoover, a leader with a single minded vision for the future and desire for power. There are also many times where individuals they take particular interest in vanish off the map without any record of them ever existing. So if the Feds are around, tread carefully and whatever you do, don't get involved.

It was no secret that between the new use of poisonous gas and weapons like "Big Bertha" or the use of submarines, there is an artillery of new and more lethal firearms. The need to establish a strong defense was always and forever on everyone's minds.

Long before there was the CIA, there was the FBI. Their jobs were not only to try to wrap their arms around organized crime. They had to find new and inventive ways to control warfare. While the rest of the world acted like anything supernatural was baloney, the FBI knew differently.

Thus the creation of the top secret "MK-Alpha" Unit. This unit was dedicated to the "recruitment" of citizens. To study individuals that exhibited heightened awareness or senses. There was an acknowledgment within the supernatural community to lay low.. Eyes were everywhere just waiting to see a twitch or whisper of the special citizens they were looking for. Many of them disappeared. It was not that they were just missing, it was as if the FBI wiped any trace of their existence. People in the know dare not ask or utter the "recruits" name on the off chance the guy sitting next to them was the Roaring 20's versions of "The Men In Black."

Government

If voting made any difference they wouldn't let us do it.

It's a new age and more people than ever before get to have a hand in choosing their champions in the bureaucratic world now that the 19th Amendment has just recently given women the right to vote!

What's more, the Government has listened to public and professional opinion, leading to a rash of business-friendly policies aimed at promoting growth in the ever-expanding economy. It's the best governing decision ever made and will surely lead to a future of unending prosperity for the American people.

All of this was to give the US a "sense of normalcy" again. Because of their laissez-faire attitude when it came to the economy it was easy to be exploited by organized crime.

Besides, ain't no way an economic disaster is just around the corner, that'd be greatly depressin'. Anyway, it's not all roses though, as the power given to political machines during the gilded age still holds strong. Funds can be misused, election results falsified, and a nauseating amount of government jobs handed out as prizes and favors instead of being appointed based on merit.

Local politicians were puppets on a string with both organized crime and the higher ups. What political corruption? That would be preposterous! That wasn't a bribe you just saw it was a charitable donation...really it was.

Industry

Nothing is particularly hard if you divide it into small jobs.

It's a great time to be a factory owner. Child labor laws have been rolled back, union membership is dropping every day, and Warren G. Harding passes more and more business-friendly legislation every day. Hats off to Mr. Frederick Taylor for your principles of scientific management and Mr. Henry Ford for implementing them. It was the era of mass production and the innovation of the assembly line. With the rise of the more attainable automobile came a boom in the steel, rubber, glass, and petroleum industry. That being said we needed roads and highway construction to accommodate it. Which came in real handy in case you had to get someplace in a hurry. At the speed of anywhere from 30 to 45 miles per hour you could cross borders in no time. So what if factories are a little less safe, so what if people tend to get injured more. The benefits far outweigh those minor details right? And the unions could surely be trusted.

Your profit margins are healthy and hale enough to more than make up for it. The second industrial revolution ended more or less a decade ago but the spirit of industry is far from dead. Better yet, the technological advances made during it are becoming more available than ever. Thanks to electricity in homes and factories products like refrigerators, washing machines, vacuum cleaners, and electric irons became widely available, greatly increasing daily chores into things done with a breeze, changing consumer culture. We did mention that if one didn't have deep enough pockets that credit was in use.

The wonders of modern technology are amazing. And businesses are making money hand over fist because of it. A significant building boom took place in both cities and suburbs. Skyscrapers, office buildings, and hotels would break ground frequently.

The down side besides the unsafe work environments and labor abuse, was how it affected agriculture and the farmers in rural areas. During the war rations were needed now there was no war. Farmers struggled with overproduction after World War I, which drove crop prices down significantly. One has to do what they do to survive. Why should they question what grains such as corn, barley, and rye were used for? Or renting out a barn at night to people you hardly know. You could ignore the smell coming from them with the amount of cash they are handing your way.

Technology

Didja hear about this new thing called an electrical television?

The economic boom after “the war to end all wars” led to a burst of exciting new inventions. Electric shavers, band-aids, traffic signals, instant cameras, electric television, frozen food, short wave transmitters, major breakthroughs in medicine, even liquid fuel rockets. The world is rapidly changing as electricity becomes more widely available and affordable.

In a hurry? Stomach rumbling too much to cook a full meal? Mr. Birdseye took care of that one for us with the invention of frozen meals.

You can’t sit on your laurels after making radios, movies and telephones. You gotta make them snazzy. Radios had vacuum tube receivers now. This meant radio signals weren’t so weak that you needed headphones to hear now they could be heard by an entire family in the living room. Early radios were powered by cumbersome, messy batteries. In the mid-1920s, the invention of the first alternating-current (AC) powered radio sets allowed folks to plug radios directly into a wall outlet.

Phones now could be used to talk to relatives and friends across the pond. With the availability of transatlantic phone calls. Movies went from music and captions to being able to hear the voices of your favorite sheik or sheba. Sadly, many of them lost their jobs because their voices weren’t like listening to a canary chirp a lovely tune.

We did mention that whole television thing right? It was invented in the late 1920’s. This box was able to transmit moving pictures with light and shadow and sounds. If you had one and you were a homebody you could just sit in your living room and skip going to the movies.

Last but not least here comes the polygraph, although something not the average joe could or should have. It was essential to the Fuzz and the FBI. It was a jarring device that could track multiple body signals at the same time. Your heart racing, breathing becoming more labored and the sweat coming off your body wasn’t just hunches for law enforcement. Now they could nail down the truth or a lie. Stating it was scientific facts essentially pushing you into a corner.

Did we mention there was a whole organized crime and psychic thing happening? This Sphyggy or Lie box could go a long way when normal shake downs didn’t seem to work.

Psychic Culture

Sometimes a carnival hypnotist is more than just another entertainer.

There are, of course, many charlatans to boast that they have powers to captivate and amaze, performing superhuman feats with impunity. (And a small fraction are even telling the truth.) However, most psychics go about things in a more clandestine manner. Their talents are usually fairly minor, and many who even have a speck of potential never realize.

This led to a secret network. A loose, underground organization of psychics, mediums, and fortune-tellers operating secretly or merely trying to survive during the Roaring Twenties.

There's always whispers about a psychic who got too brazen, who went a little too far in public, who flew too close to the sun, and they all end the same way. As we said, before one day they vanish, their homes look like no one had ever lived there, no public record of them existing can be found, and they are never seen again.

While not everyone believes in psychics, one group that knows the truth are the higher ups at the US military. They see psychics as potential military assets, but want to keep it quiet so foreign governments don't catch on. There are whisperings of a secret wing of the military that handles psychic operations: MK alpha. Rumor has it that this organization deals with studying, neutralizing, or utilizing psychics for the domestic or international interests of the country.

Charlatans had the audacity to have actual storefronts. Not these tappers. They used speakeasy back rooms, stores closed after hours and constantly changing private residences to host their gatherings, relying entirely on word-of-mouth and code words for protection. Some networks even helped move people who were running from the feds into New Orleans. Which was essentially the sanctuary city for those that were aware of their abilities. Whether it be fact or myth the feds had a tendency to stay out of. The Crescent City, the birthplace of Jazz. Would you go on a raid that might lead you to suddenly forgetting your name or someone telling you they know a deep dark secret, a dead loved one or acquaintance blab to the person you are trying to apprehend. Besides all that, some Feds left there acting as if they had no idea what their mission was way too frequently. Who knew there was a deeper meaning to its other moniker? The City That Care Forgot.

For now they'll step away from that place and get back to it later.

Inspiration

Many great pieces of media have been set in this era, here are some examples to help you get in the mood of the world, and inspire ideas for characters, scenes and stories.

Movies

The Artist, Chicago, Chaplin, La Vie En Rose, Eight Men Out, Ma Rainey's Black Bottom, Babylon.

Books

The Great Gatsby, The Sun Also Rises, The Age of Innocence, The Mystery of Mrs. Christie, The Murder of Roger Ackroyd.

TV shows

Boardwalk Empire, Peaky Blinders, Cable Girls, Babylon Berlin, Miss Fisher's Murder Mysteries, The House of Eliott.

Music from the Era

West End Blues, Rhapsody in Blue, Ain't Misbehavin, The St. Louis Blues, See See Rider Blues, Waiting for the a Train, In a Mist.

BUILDING CHARACTERS

Step 1: Fill out their ID

Develop an Idea of who your character is and what they do in the world of Moonshine.

Step 2: Attributes

Select one of the following attribute packages and assign the numbers to attributes in any order. Your attributes increase rolls for their related skills, weapons, and specialties.

•3,3,3,3• •4,3,3,2• •4,4,2,2•
•5,3,2,2• •6,2,2,2•

GRIT: Grit represents your character's strength, toughness and mental resolve.

STEALTH: Stealth represents your character's ability to do things unnoticed or with subtlety.

FOCUS: Focus represents your character's awareness, intelligence, and concentration.

CHARM: Charm represents your character's social ability.

Step 3: Vigor

HEALTH: Your Grit plus Stealth, when you get hit, it goes down.

ENERGY: Your Focus plus Charm. Spend energy for boosts to rolls.

UNWIND: Choose between Social, Physical, or Mental. This type of action when done outside of danger will recover energy.

- A social character might go to a bar.
- A physical character might go for a run.
- A mental character might sit down with a good book.

Step 4: Spend Starting Experience

You have 25 experience to distribute. A dot in a skill or ability represents an amount of practice or training in it. Skills and Weapons can be attempted even without dots, Specialties and psychic abilities require one dot to even attempt. All 25 experience must be spent.

When you spend experience to gain a dot, fill in the bubble next to the name of the ability. When you gain another dot in the same ability, fill in the next bubble.

SMUGGLE ○○○○

SNEAK ●○○○

INVESTIGATE ●●○○

NOTICE ●●●○

A character with 1 dot of Sneak, 2 dots of Investigate, and 3 dots of Disguise

- : You are completely untrained.
- : You are trained, but still relatively novice.
- : You are adept.
- : You are very skilled to a professional level.
- : You are an expert rivaled only by the best in the world.

Different types of skills have different experience costs associated with them, the chart below shows how much each dot of each type costs. You must spend all your starting experience. Experience can be gained and spent throughout the game.

Note: During character creation, you cannot buy the 4th dot of Skills, Weapons, Specialties, or Psychic.

Experience Cost	1st Dot	2nd Dot	3rd Dot	4th Dot
Skills & Weapons	1	2	3	9
Specialties	2	4	6	18
Psychic	3	6	9	27

Example: You want a character who is quite skilled at boxing, so you want them to have 2 dots of Knuckles. You must buy both dots, the first dot costs 1, and the 2nd dot costs 2, for a total of 3 experience spent.

The number of dots in a skill, specialty, weapon or psychic ability determines how you roll. After rolling you add the associated attribute. (Standing is not rolled, but offers other opportunities or challenges.)

○: Roll one 12-sided die.

●: Roll three 12-sided dice, remove the highest one and add the other two together.

●●: Roll three 12-sided dice, remove the middle one and add the other two together.

●●●: Roll three 12-sided dice, remove the lowest one and add the other two.

●●●●: Roll three 12-sided dice, keep them all.

Step 5: Status

Your standing represents your place in the world and how society might view you. Unlike other traits, outside of character creation, you cannot spend experience to raise your standing, instead, the GM will award increases or decreases to standing stats based on your character's actions in the game. See more on page 47.

During character creation you get 3 dots to place into status however you want.

Step 6: Flaws

You can take up to 3 flaws when building your character. Each flaw gives you two extra experience to spend. (page 49)

SKILLS

Your skills are your basic actions, even with no dots in a skill you can attempt it, but your odds will be much better if you have some training. The first dot of a Skill costs 1 xp, the 2nd costs 2 xp, and the 3rd costs 3 xp. If you are taking an untrained skill to 2 dots you must buy the 1st and 2nd dot for a total cost of 3 xp.

GRIT SKILLS

Athletics

Run, jump, throw, vault, and carry your team to regionals.

Force

Kick down a door, speed up a task or get a pesky psychic from digging around in your head.

Intimidate

Make people scared of you with a few choice words or a quick glare.

Resilience

Take less damage and resist temptations.

After being hit by a weapon roll Resilience. Reduce the damage based on the result:

9 or Less	No reduction
10-14	Take 1 less damage
15-19	Take 2 less damage
20-24	Take 3 less damage
25+	Take 4 less damage

STEALTH SKILLS

Disguise

Make people think you aren't who you are.

Evade

Avoid a punch, a shot, uncomfortable social engagements, or psychic intrusion. You can roll Evade to attempt to avoid any attack. This skill is passively used to avoid surprise attacks as long as you are conscious and unrestrained.

Smuggle

Get things or ideas into places where they shouldn't be (or out of places where they should be) and conceal objects covertly.

Sneak

Hide, move around unnoticed or subtly communicate with others.

FOCUS SKILLS

Drive

You can control vehicles.

Fix

You can do first aid, repair, modify or sabotage just about anything.

Investigate

Spend time to learn more about a topic, a location, or other areas of deeper study.

Notice

See things, hear things, and quickly search for things.

CHARM SKILLS

Deflect

Block melee attacks, insults, or psychics.

If an attacker is within 5 feet you can roll Deflect to block. Roll Resilience with a +2 bonus for each dot of Deflect even if the attack hits.

Empathy

Sense what other people are feeling, know how to help or exploit those in emotional distress, and make great works of art.

Guile

Lie, deceive, or manipulate with cunning.

Speech

WEAPONS

When attacking, you will roll the weapon and add the associated attribute. When taking dots beyond the first in a weapon, you get all the bonuses from the previous dots. The first dot of a Weapon costs 1 xp, the 2nd costs 2 xp, and the 3rd costs 3 xp. Remember, if you are taking an untrained weapon to 2 dots you must buy the 1st and 2nd dot for a total cost of 3 xp.

- : You are unfamiliar with this weapon. You have a penalty to attack rolls for this weapon. The penalty varies by type.
- : You are familiar with the weapon type.
- : You are very skilled with this weapon, add 2 damage.
- : You are an expert. You get a perk when using the weapon.
- : You are a master with this weapon, add another 2 damage.

Weapons also have an associated volume. This volume doesn't include the sounds a person might make after being hit.

- : This weapon is nearly silent.
- : Attacks can be heard by someone in the same room.
- : Attacks can be heard by someone in a nearby room.
- : Attacks can be heard by someone in a nearby building

Be sure to record your weapon damage on your character sheet. Weapon damage is determined by your skill and weapons dots, it only changes if you spend XP to raise relevant abilities.

WEAPONS TABLE

GRIT WEAPONS

If at first you don't succeed, hit 'em again.

Weapon	Base Damage	Range	Volume
Blackjacks	2 + Dots of Force	5 feet	●●●
Knuckles	1 + Dots of Force	5 feet	●●
Shotguns	6 (-10 Resilience)	25 feet	●●●●●

STEALTH WEAPONS

Never underestimate the element of surprise.

SPECIALTIES

Specialties are specific skills that most people aren't able to do, a new character likely won't have more than a few of them. In order to put dots in special abilities, you must have at least 1 dot in each listed prerequisite skill. The first dot of a Specialty costs 2 xp, the 2nd costs 4 xp, and the 3rd costs 6 xp. If you are taking an untrained Specialty to 2 dots you must buy the 1st and 2nd dot for a total cost of 6 xp.

Unlike Skills, Specialties are not rolled, instead they give passive benefits to skill, psychic, or weapon rolls or even new ways to use those skills.

Grit Specialties

Endurance (Prereq: Resilience and Deflect)

When I'm in the ring, I just get this burst of energy.

When spending energy on a physical action roll 1d12, if you roll a (6/5/4/2) or higher you regain 1 energy, with the target number decreasing as you gain dots of Endurance.

Presence (Prereq: Intimidate and Empathy)

Preacher, politician, or swindler. All doors open for your silver tongue.

When meeting someone for the first time, roll empathy or intimidate. On a 15 or higher, choose one of the following dispositions for the character to have towards you. Extra dots give additional options.

- Comfortable, Timid, Disinterested
- Friendly, Nervous, Jealous
- Charmed, Intimidated, Trusting
- Enamored, Terrified, Loyal

Steel Mind (Prereq: Force and Deflect)

When the new preacher stepped to the pulpit with a strange gospel, the folks around you started acting funny, but not you.

Psychics have a hard time getting into your mind. You actively defend against any psychic effect. When trying to prevent a psychic intrusion or end a psychic effect, roll with a +2 bonus per dot of Steel Mind.

Sucker Punch (Prereq: Athletics and Guile)

Everyone has a plan until they get punched in the face.

If you deal damage with a melee attack to a target who has not yet acted in initiative the target takes 2 extra damage per dot of Sucker Punch. The target also has a -5 penalty to all rolls until the end of your next turn.

Tenacity (Prereq: Resilience and Evade)

They didn't teach what you got during your time in the army. When you were in the trenches, you lasted far longer than any of your friends.

Reduce damage taken by 1 per dot of Tenacity.

Stealth Specialties

Assassinate (Prereq: Guile and Sneak)

People in your field have taken to calling you Angel on account of how your marks are taken by the good Lord before they realize.

When attacking a target who doesn't know where you are when the attack is rolled, deal 2 extra damage per dot of assassinate. For Piano wire, this bonus lasts until the initial grapple is broken.

Forge (Prereq: Empathy and Fix)

"Gee, sorry officer," you say, pulling out a piece of paper you finished not five minutes ago, "my pal here forgot her permit. As you can see, this is a perfectly legit operation."

You can make convincing fake versions of art, official documents and signatures that you've had time to study. When making a fake, roll fix. That becomes the target of the challenge roll to determine it is a fake. Different things will take more or less time to forge. A parking ticket might only take a minute, a painting could take weeks or months.

You get a +2 bonus towards making and identifying forged documents per dot of Forge.

Infiltrate (Prereq: Sneak and Force)

"What do you mean someone cleaned out the storeroom? You were here the whole time!"

When picking locks, quietly break windows, crack safes, or other such activities get a +2 bonus per dot of Infiltrate.

Pickpocket (Prereq: Smuggle and Guile)

Oliver Twist ain't got nothing on you.

You can roll smuggle to attempt to steal things from someone's person without them noticing. Make such smuggle rolls with a +2 bonus per dot of Pickpocket.

Snoop (Prereq: Notice and Evade)

They used to call you nosy Nancy. Now they just don't notice you.

You are adept at furtively overhearing conversations or looking for clues without being noticed. When investigating you can roll sneak in order to have your investigations go unnoticed. Make this sneak roll with a +2 bonus per dot of snoop.

Focus Specialties

Forensics (Prereq: Notice and Investigate)

"As we can see here, this spec of dirt indicates that our perp is a golfer in his forties with a bad knee who isn't used to wielding a gun."

You are studied in analyzing a scene and finding clues that others might miss. Others might see a simple blood splatter where you see a story. When Investigating a crime scene or tracking someone roll with a +2 bonus per dot of Forensics.

Law (Prereq: Speech and Investigate)

"Permission to treat the witness as hostile?" "Charlie, she's your wife..."

Know the ins and outs of the rule of law to better hold it up, or to know how to get around it. When making any roll to do with understanding, explaining, evading or arguing the law roll with a +2 bonus per dot of law.

Medicine (Prereq: Fix and Resilience)

"Do you want coke or the knife?"

With the proper equipment and materials, you can make drugs, and administer healthcare. A successful Fix roll against difficulty 15 can recover 1 health. This takes 30 minutes and can only be attempted once per day per person. In addition you get a +2 bonus on this and other rolls where medical knowledge would be useful.

Sniper (Prereq: Notice and Evade)

"It's not like we actually have to worry about anyone w—"

Ranged weapons have doubled range, add 2 per dot of sniper to weapon rolls for ranged attacks.

Studios (Prereq: Investigate and Force)

Even squares made fun of you.

When spending energy on a mental action roll 1d12, if you roll a (6/5/4/2) regain 1 energy, with the target number decreasing as you gain dots of Studios.

Charm Specialties

Black Market (Prereq: Smuggle and Drive)

You have friends in low places.

You have connections in the black market that give you cheaper prices for drugs and other contraband. More dots provides access to more restricted contraband. Below are examples of something you might be able to obtain at each dot level.

- A Shipment of Hooch
- Restricted weapons
- Stolen Art
- Official US mint currency plates

Cold Read (Prereq: Notice and Empathy)

"I can feel it now, the deceased's name... it starts with a P? Maybe a J?"

"Is that my Jeremy?"

"It definitely is. Jeremy wants to make sure you remember the combination for the safe. Could you recite it?"

You have an acute understanding of how to understand people's motivation. If you observe someone or talk to them, you get a +2 per dot of cold read to discern their motivation or feelings.

Moxie (Prereq: Speech and Force)

People have called you many things. Bastard, rogue, cur, but with a wink and a word nearly all is forgiven. Kid's got moxie.

You can get away with minor social taboos, and even get praise for brazenly bending social norms. Roll speech or intimidate against a challenge roll, the difficulty determined by the severity of the taboo. Make this roll with a +2 bonus per dot of Moxie.

Example Taboo	Challenge #
Gently insulting someone in a position of power.	5
Barging into someone's office.	10
Punching someone harassing people at a bar.	15
Crashing a political speech and taking the mic.	20
Serving hooch to the chief of police.	25
Shooting someone who is harassing people.	30

Performance (Prereq: Empathy and Force)

Ever since talkies of your saloon performance came out, people can't help but stop you in the street.

You can make all eyes in a room fall on you through acting, music, dance, oration, or other spectacles. Roll Empathy to determine how many people you have the full attention of. Make this roll with a +2 bonus per dot of Performance.

Number of People	Challenge #
One person.	10
A small crowd.	15
An entire room.	20
Everyone who can see or hear you.	25

Pontificate (Prereq: Speech and Resilience)

Your tendency of being long-winded might tire others out, but you feel great afterwards.

When spending energy on a social action roll 1d12, if you roll a (6/5/4/2) regain 1 energy, with the target number decreasing as you gain dots of Pontificate.

PSYCHIC

Those with supernatural powers are among the very few, but they can wield great influence. While most do not believe such things exist, and charlatans can fake them, they hide in shadows, offices, and positions of power.

Like Specialties, Psychic abilities require you to have at least one dot in each of the listed prerequisite skills. When taking a dot in a Psychic ability you unlock the powers detailed in the description, as well as the power listed next to the 1st dot. When taking a 2nd or 3rd dot, you add those other abilities to your repertoire. The first dot of a Psychic ability costs 3 xp, the 2nd costs 6 xp, and the 3rd costs 9 xp. Remember, if you are taking an untrained skill to 2 dots you must buy the 1st and 2nd dot for a total cost of 9 xp.

When using a Psychic ability, choose which power (up to your dot level) you would like to use, spend energy equal to the dot level of the ability, and roll against the higher of the target's evade or deflect. If they are unaware that you are attempting to psychically manipulate them, they take their passive roll. Psychic skills are mental abilities with no associated attribute. If the target becomes aware of a prolonged effect they can roll Force to get you out of their head.

If you have any dots in psychic skills you are attuned to the paranormal world, as such you are aware of any psychic intrusions and get to make active rolls to Evade, Deflect, or Force them out.

Hypnotism (Prereq: Speech and Disguise)

Hypnotism has powerful effects but requires a subject to willingly focus on you for 10 minutes. They don't need to know you are hypnotizing them. A lecturer, therapist, or Preacher could hypnotize people during their daily work. You may Hypnotize yourself if you so desire. These effects can last for up to one day with one dot, one week with two dots, and one month with three dots.

- You can adjust people's habits slightly. For example, change the route someone takes to work, make them dislike their favorite food, or other such adjustments.
- You can make people behave strongly against their character, but they will not willingly harm themselves or put themselves in harm's way. If they are compelled to act against their morals, they can roll Force, to break the hypnotism before taking the action. You can also put someone or yourself into a healing trance that doubles energy and health recovery.
- You can hide complete control of a person in their psyche to force them to behave exactly as you want them to. In this state, they can behave against their own character and against their own morals or self-preservation. This state lasts until the condition of your choosing or one month.
- You can perform all these types of hypnosis on an entire room of people all at once. You must spend the energy for the level of hypnotism +4 to do so. This hypnotism doesn't target specific people, so any onlooker or unexpected person to witness it may also fall victim.

Medium (Prereq: Empathy and Investigate)

You can reach out to the dead, and they will reach back. Spirits of restless dead wander the world, unable to interact with the corporeal world. Your mind is able to cross that divide. A great deal of knowledge can be gained from those between worlds, though they aren't always fully coherent.

Using medium is unopposed, unless the ghost is unwilling.

● You can see nearby spirits for 1 minute, and hear what they are saying. They can not hear you, but might respond to nearby people, objects, or actions.

●● You can see and hear nearby spirits for 1 minute. If you have an object closely associated with one of the spirits, that spirit can hear you and give one-word answers and simple gestures in response. Spirits might not be truthful or cooperative.

●●● You can hold a seance to summon a particular spirit. It takes a half-hour, and an object or willing person closely associated with the spirit. After that time you can ask 3 questions. It can respond to each question in 6 words. Spirits might not be truthful or cooperative.

●●●● You can allow a spirit to possess you, allowing them to speak and act on the material world. A spirit might refuse to leave, and they aren't always easy to force out. Until you do remove them, they have full control of your body.

Read Minds (Prereq: Empathy and Sneak)

If you can see someone's eyes you can peer into their mind.

● See Auras for 10 seconds. You can look at people to get a sense of their emotions and nature.

●● Read Surface Thoughts for 30 seconds. You can hear their stream of thoughts.

●●● Read Deep Thoughts for 1 minute. You can delve into their memories and hidden thoughts.

●●●● You enter the mind of your target, and in an instant, you can gather all the information they have. If this target has any addictions or phobias, you inherit those.

Suggestion (Prereq: Guile and Force)

With a single phrase, you can convince people to do things they otherwise might not have done, though it has to be something they might reasonably do. You might make a bouncer let you into a bar, or a security guard with tobacco addiction take a smoke break. When the suggestion ends, the subject will not know they were compelled, rather they will rationalize their choices, but might work to undo their compelled actions.

- The suggestion lasts for 30 seconds
- The suggestion lasts for 30 minutes
- The suggestion lasts for 3 hours
- The suggestion lasts for 3 hours and they will now take actions they would otherwise have not reasonably done. After the suggestion is complete, roll 1d12. On 1 the subject dies.

Psychometry (Prereq: Empathy and Notice)

You can learn a great deal from touching an object and sensing its history. While the object's memory will mostly be clear, faces are impossible to identify from the visions.

- You can see the last hour of an object's history.
- You can see the last day of an object's history.
- You can see the last month of an object's history.
- You can see the last century of an object's history. You become deeply attached to this item and losing it causes great strife.

STANDING

Your standing represents your place in the world and how society might view you. Unlike other traits, outside of character creation, you cannot spend experience to raise your standing, instead, the GM will award increases or decreases to standing stats based on your character's actions in the game.

During standard character creation you get 3 dots of Standing, spent on any mix of Contacts, Fame, and Wealth.

Contacts

- : Maybe you just moved into town, you don't know anyone important.
- : You have a few low-level connections.
- : You have a few connections, and can call in small favors. (Getting into a club, or borrowing 50 dollars)
- : You have 2nd hand connections to very important people like the chief of police or important clergy.
- : You are extremely well connected, if you want to talk to someone, you probably can.
- : You are the who's who of what's what. You have dirt on anyone important.

Fame

- : No one knows who you are.
- : You are slightly known in a niche community.
- : You are well known within a niche community.
- : Anyone might know you. You are recognized frequently.
- : You are very well known, most people will know who you are and recognize you.
- : You are an icon, going out without security can be a hassle.

Wealth

- : You are entirely broke, likely squatting or living with a few friends in a small apartment.
- : You make a meager income, enough to get by, but luxuries are infrequent.
- : You are comfortable, you might own a flat, and can occasionally splurge.
- : You are very well off, you might own a townhouse with a small staff.
- : You are very wealthy, you live a life of glamor and opulence with money to spend on frivolous things.
- : You are among the wealthiest people in the city.

Changes in Standing

During a campaign your standing can change at the GM's discretion. If you make pay-dirt on a big job, your wealth might go up, lose it all at the casino and it will go back down. If you make a new important friend, you might gain a dot of contacts, if that person gets burned it'll go back down.

FLAWS

No one is perfect. Flaws will add additional hurdles that your character will have to get over or work around in their day to day life. During character creation you can select up to 3 flaws. For each flaw selected gain 2 experience.

When recording a flaw, write the flaw down in the Flaws section of the character sheet. Certain flaws might require additional details.

Addict

Some things just get your blood pumping.

Choose something your character is addicted to. (Alcohol, Drugs, Gambling, Smoking.) While having cravings for your addiction take a -5 penalty to all rolls. This flaw can be taken more than once for different addictions.

Asthmatic

You are more of a 100m dash kinda person.

You have a -5 penalty on physical rolls after 5 minutes of physical activity. This penalty lasts until you rest for an hour.

Bad Sight

How many fingers am I holding up?

You have a -5 penalty on notice rolls and weapon rolls at targets more than 5 feet away if you aren't wearing your glasses.

Blunt

Subtlety? Whats that?

You have a -5 penalty on all stealth based social rolls and guile.

Clumsy

Do you have a less expensive tea set?

You have a -5 penalty on all stealth based physical rolls.

Fawning

Some people try too hard when in the presence of greatness.

You have a -5 penalty on all social rolls when talking to someone higher status than you.

Gullible

I've got a bridge to sell you.

You have a -5 penalty when trying to determine if someone is lying to you.

Impatient

Some people don't mind hurrying up to wait. You aren't some people.

If you have been sitting around for 5 minutes, roll resilience against difficulty 5. Every 5 minutes roll again, with the difficulty going up by 5. If you fail the roll, your character needs to try to get up and do something.

Low Pain Tolerance

Heaven forbid you stub your toe.

You have a -5 penalty to all rolls if you took damage in the last hour.

Luddite

Cars, typewriters, electricity, projectors?! What will they come up with next?

You have a -5 penalty when attempting to use modern technology.

Marked

You made some enemies in the mob, and they want to collect.

You are on bad terms with the mob.

Paranoid

You are a little jumpier around things that go bump in the night.

You have a -5 penalty to all rolls while in dark, creepy, or dangerous environments. This penalty is removed if a fight breaks out.

Phobia

There are things you don't like and then there are things you REALLY don't like.

Choose something your character is afraid of. (Heights, Guns, Spiders) While in the presence of your phobia take a -5 penalty to all rolls. This flaw can be taken more than once for different phobias.

Recognizable

You've just got one of those faces.

People who have seen you once are likely to recognize you if they see you again.

Shaky Hands

Steady... Steady...

You have a -5 penalty when attempting anything requiring a steady hand.

Shy

New people make you nervous. You never know what they are gonna do.

You have a -5 penalty on social rolls when interacting with someone you haven't met before.

Shunned

I wouldn't want to belong to a club that would have me as a member... and they definitely don't want me as a member.

Choose an organization (church, newspaper, university, union, etc.) You used to be a member, now people associated with it don't want anything to do with you.

Sleepy

Someone is all tuckered out.

When exhausted, your penalty is doubled to -10 on all rolls.

Slow Healing

Ever since they were a child they suffered from a sickly constitution.

Recover health half as quickly from natural healing.

Squeamish

I much prefer it when people's insides are inside, is that so strange?

You have a -5 penalty to all rolls while in the presence of blood.

Weak-Willed

You are feeling sleepy... very, very sleepy.

You have a -5 penalty to resist or repel psychic intrusions.

Wanted

Your face is on posters all over town. Just like you always dreamed.

You are wanted by the police.

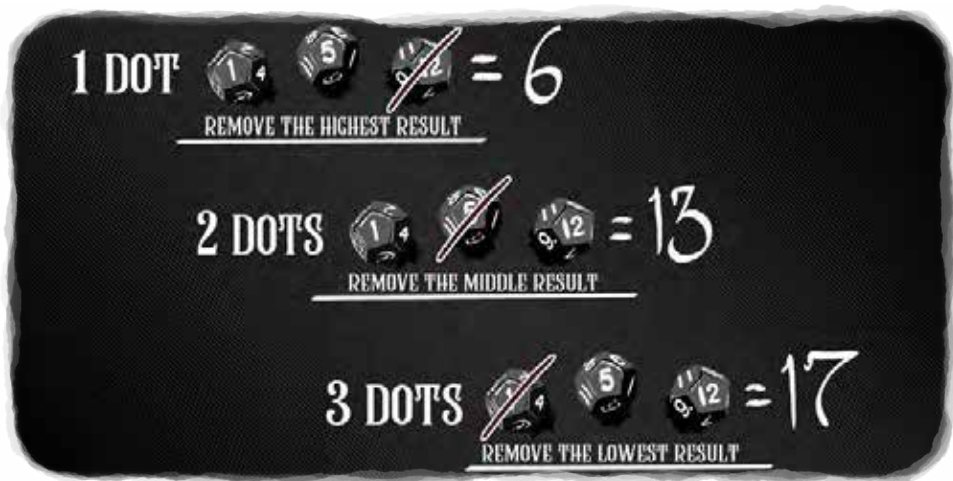

PLAYING THE GAME

Rolling Dice

The number of dots in a skill, weapon or psychic ability determines how you roll. After rolling you add the associated attribute. For example, a character with 3 Grit, and two dots in Intimidate, when trying to scare someone would roll 3d12, remove the middle result, add the remaining dice, and then add an additional 3.

- : Roll one 12-sided die and add it to the relevant attribute.
- : Roll three 12-sided dice, remove the highest one and add the other two with the relevant attribute
- : Roll three 12-sided dice, remove the middle one and add the other two with the relevant attribute
- : Roll three 12-sided dice, remove the lowest one and add the other two with the relevant attribute
- : Roll three 12-sided dice and add them all to the relevant attribute.

Sometimes a passive roll will be called for. In this case, add the associated attribute plus three for each dot in the skill. For example, if a character with 4 stealth and 2 dots of Evade is shot at by a gunman they were not aware of, they would passively Evade. Their passive Evade is 4 from their stealth and 3 from each of their dots of Evade, totaling 10.

There are two types of Dice rolls, challenge and contested.

Challenge rolls are made against a flat difficulty. This type of roll might be made when trying to pick a lock, scale a wall, or search for clues. Below are some guidelines for challenge rolls.

Difficulty	Challenge #
Trivial. Most untrained people can still manage this.	5
Easy. Basic training would prepare someone for this.	10
Tricky. This type of task might require some finesse.	15
Difficult. Even professionals might struggle with this.	20
Herculean. Very few people can accomplish this.	25

Difficulty	Challenge #
Nearly Impossible. Incredible feats for anyone.	30

In order to succeed on a challenge roll, you have to get a result equal to or higher than the challenge number.

Opposed rolls are when two characters are actively working towards opposite goals. This might be one character lying to another, a test of strength, or a psychic intrusion.

Both characters make their relevant roll, and the person with the higher result wins the contest. In the case of a tie, the player who instigated the roll wins the tie.

GMs can use this in a binary or scaled way. You could have a closer result in a smaller victory than a wider disparity in result, this can apply to both Challenge rolls and Opposed rolls. For a simpler game, you can have two possible outcomes, success and failure.

Teamwork

Sometimes two heads are better than one. If multiple people are working together on the same task everyone rolls with a +2 bonus and only the highest result is counted.

It is up to GM discretion when teamwork can or can't be used based on how practical having multiple people attempting the task together is. For example Driving a car isn't made easier by several people holding the wheel. Teamwork can not be done reactively.

COMBAT

When a physical altercation happens, combat begins. Combat is more structured than the rest of Moonshine and is fought in rounds with a turn order. The first thing that happens is determining the turn order. Every combatant rolls Force. The highest result goes first, and turn order descends in order of the roll result. In the case of a tie, these are the tiebreakers in order.

- Dots of Force
- Dots of Drive
- 1d12 roll-off.

If combat is initiated by a surprise attack, the attacker(s) don't roll into combat order, instead, they are automatically first.

One round of combat represents 10 seconds of time passing. If using a grid, combat is fought on a grid of 5-foot squares.

On a Turn

On a turn, you can move up to 25 feet and take one of the following actions. Additionally, you can do simple tasks within reason, like speaking, opening a door, picking up, dropping, or stowing an object.

Actions

- Attack
- Grapple
- Skill Roll or Psychic Roll
- Sprint

Attacking

Making an attack is done in the following steps.

1. Opposed weapon roll
2. Determine Damage
3. Resilience Challenge roll to reduce damage.

Opposed Weapon roll

When making an attack, declare a target, and the type of weapon you are making the attack with. Then roll with the weapon. The target of the attack rolls their defense, either Evade or Deflect (Deflect can only be rolled against melee or thrown attacks). If the defender gets a higher result, the attack misses. Otherwise the attack hits, and continues to step 2.

Determine Damage

In Moonshine damage isn't rolled, instead damage dealt is based on how many dots you have in the weapon you are using, and sometimes dots in other skills. Every weapon has base damage (page 23.) As you get more dots with a weapon type the damage goes up and at three dots you unlock a special perk that you can use while using the weapon.

Resilience Challenge Roll

If an attack hits, the defender rolls resilience. Some weapons may reduce this roll by 5 or 10, while a failed deflect will raise the resilience roll. They then take the listed weapon damage minus the result on the table below. An attack can't be reduced below 0 damage by resilience.

9 or Less	No reduction
10-14	Take 1 less damage
15-19	Take 2 less damage
20-24	Take 3 less damage
25+	Take 4 less damage

If a character's health is dropped to 0, they immediately fall unconscious, depending on the nature of the injury they might start bleeding out, or even die immediately.

Example

Mickey grabs a baseball bat and charges forward at Leonard. He uses his action to swing the bat. He rolls Blackjacks. He rolls 5,6,11. Because he has two dots of Blackjacks and 4 grit, his total result is 20. He spends an energy to push it to a 23. Simultaneously, Leonard rolls Deflect. He has 1 dot and 3 charm. With a roll of 2,9,10, he gets a result of 14. The attack hits.

A Blackjack's damage is 2 + Dots of Force. Mickey has 2 dots of Force and gets another two damage from having a 2nd dot in Blackjacks for a total damage of 6.

Mickey rolls Resilience. He has 2 dots of Resilience and 3 grit. He rolls 1,5,6, for a total of 10. Because he attempted to Deflect he gets +2 for each dot, bumping him up to a 12, reducing the damage by 1, resulting in a total of 5 damage.

Combat Modifiers

Here are some common situational modifiers that may come up during combat. It is possible for more than one of these circumstances to be happening for a single attack. If so apply them all to get the total modifier.

Defender behind partial cover (table, couch, etc)	-5 to the roll
Defender behind full cover (wall, car, tree, etc)	-10 to the roll
Attacker making a 'called shot' at a leg or arm	-5 to the roll
Attacker making a 'called shot' at a head or hand	-10 to the roll
Attacker using a long gun against an adjacent target	-5 to the roll
Attacker is grappled	-10 to the roll
Attacker has the high ground	+5 to the roll

These are some common examples, but PCs and NPCs alike should feel free to use creative ways to try and get advantages. Maybe a knife fighter wants to make a guile roll instead of a knife roll in order to feint. If they succeed they might get a +5 or +10 bonus to their next attack against that target depending on how high they roll.

A called shot is when an attacker tries to shoot or strike a specific part of the body. If you want to make a called shot you must declare it before making the weapon roll.

Leg	Movement speed is reduced to 10 feet per round for 1 hour
Arm	Rolls using that arm have a -5 penalty for the next hour.
Head	The attack deals 3 extra damage.
Hand	Cannot hold objects with that hand. Rolls using that hand have a -10 penalty for 1 hour.

Other Actions in Combat

Grappling

When trying to grapple a target, you must be adjacent to them. Make an opposed roll. The instigator rolls Force, the target rolls either Force or Evade. If the instigator wins, the target cannot move. Any attacks they make are at a -10 penalty. The instigator may only move 10 feet and also may not make attacks with weapons that require 2 hands, but has no penalty to other attacks.

A grappled character may use their action to try and break out of the grapple. This is an opposed roll, the grappled character may roll Evade or Force against the grappler's Force. If the grappled character wins this roll (they are considered the instigator) they break free from the grapple.

Skill Roll or Psychic Roll

A skill or Psychic roll in combat is any other roll that a character might want to make in combat, this includes but is not limited to: Sneak, to hide, Notice to find a hidden target, Intimidate, guile or speech to try and talk combatants out of further fighting. At GM discretion these can sometimes be considered simple tasks that do not take a turn.

Sprint

You can use your action to move 1 additional time.

End of Combat

When combat ends, the structure of combat order ends. While sometimes combat ends because all characters on one or more side of the combat have their health reduced to 0, very few characters want to fight to the death. More often if a combatant feels they are on the losing side of a fight they will surrender, hide or flee. People don't want to die, and will only fight to the death if they have to, for example, a hit-man hired by the mafia might fight to the death because they know failure would result in death or worse at the hand of their employer.

HEALTH

Health is a representation of how hurt your character is. Hit 0 and you are in deep trouble

Healing

Health doesn't recover quickly. If you get shot in the arm, it will take more than a good night's sleep to be back at 100%. Without any intervention, characters recover 1 health at the end of any day where they didn't take damage.

However with the help of a doctor, or even a hypnotist, that healing can be sped up.

Dropping to 0

If a character's health drops to 0, they immediately fall unconscious. Depending on the nature of the injury the character might be stable, bleeding out, or immediately dead. While a character is unconscious they may not speak, move, or take any actions. They automatically fail any contested rolls.

Stable

A character knocked out by blunt force is unconscious and will wake up in half an hour with 1 health. First aid or other medical attention can speed that up.

Bleeding Out

A character dropped to 0 health by an explosion, a blade or a gun is unconscious and bleeding out. If left alone, the character will die in 5 minutes. Fix can be rolled to try and stabilize them. Each roll takes 1 minute against a challenge of 15.

Immediate Death

It is possible to take damage that would drop a character below 0 health. If a character drops to -1 or -2 health, they instead just go to 0 health. However if a character drops to -3 health or lower, regardless of the type of damage dealt, they are immediately dead.

Knockout Attacks

Any attack made with a blunt weapon can be declared as a knockout attack. If a knockout attack would do enough damage to reduce a target to -3 health, they instead drop to exactly 0 health and are stable.

Falling

It turns out that falling hurts. For every 5 feet your character falls, take 1 damage. This damage can not be reduced by resilience. However, if you jumped (i.e. not pushed or thrown over) you can roll athletics. If your result is higher than the distance fallen, take no damage. This roll is all or nothing.

ENERGY

Energy can be used in two ways: Boosting rolls or using psychic abilities.

Boosting Rolls

After any roll you can spend up to two energy. Each point of energy spent gives a +3 bonus to the roll. This must be spent before the outcome is revealed. For contested rolls, the instigator declares energy expenditure first, the defender must then declare how much energy they will spend before either party reveals their result.

For example a character rolling initiative could spend 2 energy after rolling force to gain a +6 bonus.

Psychic Abilities

When using a Psychic ability, choose which power (up to your dot level) you would like to use, and spend energy equal to the dot level of the ability.

For example a character has 2 dots in Read Minds and wants to see the auras of nearby people. They would have to spend one energy to do so. They the roll read minds, using both dots.

Recovering Energy

There are two ways to recover spent energy. Seeping, and Unwinding.

Sleep

If you get six hours of uninterrupted sleep, you recover all of your energy. Additionally if your character has been awake for more than 20 hours, they lose one energy every hour and can no longer benefit from unwinding until they get six hours of uninterrupted sleep.

Unwind

Every hour spent unwinding recovers two energy. Different characters do this in different ways depending on their unwind type.

Social Unwind

A character with social unwind might regain energy by going to a bar, calling a friend or going to a party. Social unwind characters are reinvigorated by social interaction.

Mental Unwind

A character with mental unwind might regain energy by writing in a journal, reading a book, doing research, making art, or designing something. Mental unwind characters are reinvigorated by spending time using their mind.

Physical Unwind

A character with physical unwind might regain energy by going for a jog, heading to the gym or otherwise engaging in safe and controlled athletic activity. Physical unwind characters are reinvigorated by getting their body moving and blood pumping.

Exhaustion

If you have zero energy you take a -5 penalty to all rolls and can no longer benefit from unwinding until you get six hours of uninterrupted sleep.

RUNNING THE GAME

When playing Moonshine one person will take on the role of the Story Teller. This player controls the non-player characters, the city, and the world that the players will inhabit with their characters. Usually the Story Teller will set the scene, provide the conflict at hand and have the NPCs and world react as the player characters try to achieve their goals.

Types of Stories

Moonshine is a diverse system that can tell many stories, but generally they fall into one of four categories.

Gumshoe

In a gumshoe game the player characters will be trying to solve some mystery or fix some problem outside the official scope of the law. They might be a private investigation agency, or just a bunch of people who were at the wrong place at the wrong time.

Underworld

In an underworld game the player characters operate in opposition to the law, stealing, smuggling, and racketeering their way to the top. They might be a group of criminals who fell in with each other, or part of the organized crime syndicates that control large swaths of the city. Rob a bank, smuggle hooch past the coppers, or put a hit on a rival mob leader.

Fuzz

In a Fuzz game the player characters work for the city in law enforcement as detectives, beat cops and analysts. Not only do they have to solve crimes, but they also need to deal with the political pressures around them. Mob influence, dirty cops, and temptation to let something slide.

Slice of Life

A slice of life game is more laid back, following regular people through their lives in the city. This type of game is great for romance, gossip, political maneuvering and shining a light on the small things in life.

Your game can be any one of these, a mix of several or even something entirely different. The player characters could be a group of feds tracking down dangerous psychics, or a group of psychics trying to keep a step ahead of people trying to find them. Let your imagination run wild.

Classes of Rolls

Sometimes it matters if a roll being made is Physical, Mental, or Social roll. A skill could potentially be used for all three of these depending on the context. For example, Smuggle could be rolled to Physically hide something on your person or to Socially bring up a topic of conversation in a subtle way. Here are the guidelines for determining the class of any given roll.

Physical Rolls: Actions that rely mostly on bodily movement, strength, or coordination.

Mental Rolls: Actions that rely on intellect, knowledge, or cognitive abilities, independent of physical or social interaction.

Social Rolls: Actions that focus on communication, interaction, and the understanding of others through dialogue, empathy, or observation of people.

The class of roll will matter for certain flaws and specialties that apply to one class or another.

Skill Flexibility

In Moonshine skills can often be rolled in a variety of different contexts for different types of situations. When a character attempts something that requires a roll it is sometimes possible that several rolls could make sense in the situation. If so, offer the options and let them decide, with the understanding that different skills might yield different types of results with a success.

For example Sarah has been caught sneaking into a warehouse by the security officer. She could try to lie about why she is there with Guile, or disguise her true intentions with Disguise. Guile is more flexible here and she could tell any sort of lie, be it that she works there, or is a friend of the owner. With Disguise she is limited to the type of deception she can attempt. But if Sarah is untrained in Guile and has two dots of Disguise, that might be the better course of action for her.

A Storyteller is free to call for whatever roll or rolls feel right to them in the situation at hand.

Crafting Stories

When building campaigns or one off stories for a game of Moonshine, there are many ways to approach it. Moonshine as a system is focused on intrigue, mystery, investigation, stories where the supernatural lives on the periphery, and politics (political or otherwise.)

There are two main ways to approach stories told through Moonshine.

Character Driven

In a character driven game the primary focus is on the player characters, their goals and aspirations. You'll want to know what the characters are trying to achieve, people and events from their backstories, and their fears. The characters will be going after their goals while the city throws roadblocks and conflict in their way. These tend to be more opened ended and rely on players to be driven and likely to take initiative. You become a reactive force more often than a driving force as the Storyteller.

Story Driven

In a story driven game the players are taken through a more curated tale. You provide a rich and juicy lead that they can't resist following and begin to pull at the thread you've spun. Note that this doesn't mean the game is railroaded. Player characters will still have agency in a story driven game, and be able to make choices that will inevitably force the story to bend and react. These stories are easier for newer players, who are often more comfortable with clear direction on where to go and what to do next, rather than having to take initiative within a large and often intimidating open world.

It is also important to know what Moonshine is not designed to handle well. Dungeon crawls or other combat heavy games will likely fall flat, while combat does exist and will happen in most games, it is meant to be quick, and over within a round or two. Additionally the consequences are far greater. Not only are Moonshine characters quite fragile they also heal very slowly, sometimes taking a week or more to fully recover from a brush with death. Due to this a game where combat is the primary focus is probably better served with a different system.

Writing Mysteries

The whodunit is a great backdrop for a Moonshine game. To write a mystery, start by writing the crime itself. What happened? Who did it? How did they do it? What did they do to cover their tracks? Where did they get sloppy? Once you have all those questions answered you want to add in some red herrings and other potential suspects. Remember that it is always easier to write the mystery than to solve it, so leave more clues than you think your players will need. You already know the answer, which will make the clues feel more obvious than they actually are.

Running Combat

Combat in Moonshine is extremely dangerous, even a very combat capable character can end up being dropped if the dice roll that way. Two things that are very important to remember for combat in Moonshine are these:

- 1. People do not want to die.

Unlike more combat oriented TTRPGs, fights to the death are very rare in Moonshine. People will generally try to find some other way out of combat if it feels like they are on the back foot. They might hide, flee, or negotiate. Survival instinct will kick in and people will do what they have to do to see tomorrow.

- 2. It is not comfortable to take a human life.

For almost everyone, killing someone, even in defense can be traumatizing. This is true for NPCs and PCs alike. If someone can accomplish what they want to do without killing, they will. Not only is it mentally taxing, it is legally taxing. If someone is going around killing and robbing it is only a matter of time before the police get involved. Actions have consequences, and no one in Moonshine is too powerful to avoid them forever.

Character Death

Inevitably, and eventually a player character will die. When someone is dead, they are dead with no resurrection magic to bring them back. (Though they can potentially be spoken to by a powerful medium, or in rare cases even possess a medium.) If the entire party is all unconscious, you can have them wake up at the hospital, or some other location where they are injured, perhaps egos bruised, but alive.

When a character does die, that player will make a new character to be inserted into the story. It is recommended to start this new character at around the same amount of experience as the rest of the party. While Moonshine does function in groups of varying experience counts, a character death is already hard enough without also feeling all the experience they gained be washed away with them.

Ideally, character death should be rare and meaningful. Character deaths can be memorable and beautiful story moments when the death serves a purpose. Staying behind to hold off a hitman, charging back into a fire to save someone else, or diving in front of a bullet. The last thing you want is someone's character getting killed in a random encounter for no reason. As a general rule if an NPC has 2 dots or more in a weapon, you should consider them to be a potentially lethal threat.

Progression

As player characters do more things and complete more tasks they will get progressively more skilled. This is represented through gaining experience. At the end of each session player characters should get 1-2 experience, and at the end of a major plot point or story line they should get an additional 2-3. This experience can be spent in the same way it is during character creation (page 17) or saved to buy a more expensive upgrade.

NPCs

Non-Player Characters represent every person other than those controlled by the players. NPCs have character sheets just like player characters, and use all the same rules for rolling dice. Most NPCs should be built with 15-20 experience, beat cops, store owners, bank tellers. More powerful or important NPCs will be built high experience budgets, powerful psychics, gang leaders, political leaders. If you need to quickly have stats for a relatively normal person, give them 3 in all attributes and 1 dot of each skill.

Energy

Just like player characters, NPCs have energy that they can use to boost rolls or on psychic abilities. If the party is in a brawl with a street gang, the street gang likely won't be going into it with full energy. They have been doing stuff off camera all day. In general NPCs should start with 3 energy already spent unless you are confident they would be well rested and fully energized.

Safety Tools

Tabletop RPGs can be intense, and it is important to make sure what everyone at the table is comfortable with and respect those boundaries. There are a wide variety of ways to establish a safe table. Here are a few.

Session 0

Have a session before the first game to talk about what everyone's expectations are for the campaign, things they want to see and don't want to see, and what topics people are or are not comfortable with.

X cards

Have a way for players and the GM to end or pause a scene that they are uncomfortable with. One way to do this is for each player to have a card with an X that they can hold up if they need the scene to stop.

Check out ttrpgsafetytoolkit.com for more excellent tools to make sure everyone at your table is comfortable!

EQUIPMENT

Money can go a long way. Both in character creation and while playing you might need to spend some greenbacks. Here is a guideline for how much different things may cost you.

Equipment is best run fairly loosely with only the most important objects listed on the character sheets. Rather than get bogged down in the particulars it is recommended to be loose with inventory. If a character would reasonably have something on their person, they have it.

Wealth

Dots	Starting Wealth	Weekly Income
○	$10	$0
●	$240	$40
●●	$800	$100
●●●	$2,000	$200
●●●●	$6,000*	$500
●●●●●	$25,000*	$1000

*standard character creation rules don't permit starting with 4 or 5 dots of wealth.

Starting Wealth

This is how much cash your character will have in character creation. This can be spent immediately or saved for later.

Weekly Income

This is a guideline for how much money a character can make by devoting a week of time to their normal work. This is based on your starting dots of wealth and might not change with your dots of wealth. For example if a character comes across a cache of hooch and sells it off for a huge gain, that might not change their expected rate of regular income.

Changing Wealth

A guideline for gaining or losing dots is by using the starting Wealth numbers. If your current available cash falls below the previous dot's starting wealth you might lose a dot, if it rises above the next dot's starting wealth you might gain a dot.

Cost of living per week

Meager	$20
Modest	$30
Comfortable	$50
Affluent	$100
Elite	$300

Meager

You likely live in a studio apartment with one or two other people and your diet is mostly made up of basic staple foods. You get around mostly on foot, or the occasional streetcar. Your clothing is second hand, and your entertainment is largely free activities, like a walk in the park or reading in the library.

Modest

You split rent on a small apartment. Your food is mostly grains with some fruit or meat. You take trains or streetcars to get around. You mostly have practical clothing, but can occasionally buy something new. For entertainment you might see a movie or go to a vaudeville show around once a week.

Comfortable

You live in a single-family home/apartment. You get high quality food and dine out somewhat regularly. You can hire taxis and might even own a car. You wear stylish clothing and can afford to follow trends. You have the freedom to see movies, plays, and go to sporting events most weeks. You can afford access to speakeasies.

Affluent

You have a large home with a small staff of maids and chefs. You own a car and likely have a chauffeur to drive it. You wear the nicest clothing and can get your clothes custom tailored to fit you perfectly. For entertainment you might attend or throw a lavish party, even able to rent a yacht or public venue.

Elite

You own a mansion in the most fashionable neighborhood. You have extravagant meals prepared by private chefs and several cars so you can attend events in the perfect ride. You are a VIP at the most important events in the city, and if you throw a party people are clamoring to get an invite.

Hotel (per night)	$2
House rent (week)	$25
House	$4,000

*The cost of living estimates on page 70 include housing costs.

Ammunition

The costs expressed here represent the value of ammunition used up with each weapon roll.

Arrows	$1 per 50 arrows
Machine Gun Rounds	$1 per 5 clips
Pistol Bullets	$1 per 50 bullets
Rifle Cartridges	$1 per 10 cartridges
Shotgun Shells	$1 per 5 shells

Luxury Goods

All of the prices listed are base values without any bells and whistles. If you want to impress, you can choose to spend more to get higher end versions of the products. They aren't mechanically any different other than that you are more likely to turn some heads.

If you pay 2x of the price it is a well made version of the item. People might recognize the craftsmanship.

If you pay 5x it is a luxury version of the item. You will definitely catch some stares if you are seen around town with them.

If you pay 10x it is a top of the line ultra-luxury version of item. These are custom made and will make even the wealthiest of your circle turn green with envy. Save up for that $150,000 party yacht!

Owning Luxury goods and showing them off can raise your fame, but purchasing them might lower your wealth.

USING THE CODEX

The goal of the NPC codex is to provide you with the tools you need to run your game. Players are unpredictable and you will find yourself needing to improvise an NPC or environment that you hadn't anticipated. With the codex, you should be able to quickly find an appropriate stat block and get on with the game!

Be Flexible

The specific identity given to an NPC stat block within the Codex is fungible. So if you need a priest you could use the Politician or Occult Researcher. If you need a bouncer you could use the Beat Cop or Mob Enforcer. You can even fudge the dots a bit if you want this NPC to be a little better or a little worse than what the Codex block provides. At the end of the day this is meant to be a tool to enhance your game, so don't feel restrained by it. Make it work for you!

Threat

Unlike most tabletop role playing games, XP is not necessarily a good indicator for how dangerous an NPC is in combat. Because Moonshine is not combat focused many NPCs will have very expensive builds that eschew combat capability almost entirely. For example the Occult Researcher is a 55xp build that would almost certainly lose in a fight to the Mechanic, who only has 25xp. So while you probably wouldn't want the Occult Researcher digging into your misdeeds and hunting for skeletons in your closet, they aren't much of a threat in a direct confrontation. This means the Occult Researcher would take steps to avoid that outcome, either by hiring muscle, avoiding confrontation entirely, or taking a social approach with leverage.

The best way to analyze threat is by looking directly at weapon dots and related specialties, like Endurance, Sucker Punch, Tenacity, Assassinate, and Sniper.

Building NPCs

Player Characters and Non-Player Characters use the exact same rules for spending XP and acquiring dots of abilities. So you do not need to learn anything new in order to build new NPCs specific to your game.

Note that even two dots of a weapon skill will make an NPC a real lethal threat to most player characters. As such you should only give 2 weapon dots to NPCs that are very well trained with a weapon, and only 3 if they are professional users of or otherwise experts. The 4th dot should be reserved for the most elite combatants in the world.

Chi Town Choices

by Meridith Claire

"I am drowning, my dear, in seas of fire."

-Virginia Woolf, To the Lighthouse

Ever feel excited but fearful at the same time? The pit of your stomach both sinks and does the Charleston all at once. That's how I feel every time I step off the elevator as I dust out of work.

Chicago doesn't seem as big as it used to be. I ain't that same sap that stepped off the train a year ago. No more walking down the wrong streets getting to work or being too afraid to leave my place at night. I wouldn't say I was a local yet but I am getting there. It helps that seven months ago I was in the right place at the wrong time. Some do-gooder beat copper who wasn't on the take stupidly tried to chase down a thug from the Chicago Outfit. I stopped him by faking a stomach ache. Word got around and before you know it I'm knocking on the door of The Evening Underground being ushered in whenever I want.

I don't even realize I'm heading in that direction. Hooch is supposed to be illegal I guess for the most part it is but if you know the knock the rules don't apply. I'm not like most itchin for a drink or to watch that canary who takes the stage every night. I just like being in the dark watching people, at least that's what I tell myself. Turning the corner I take the stairs down beneath The Wastons & Wolf Department Store. No longer worried about getting clipped, I tap on the door to the beat of the secret knock, then wait for the small peep hole to slide open to make sure I ain't a enemy or a Bull.

The door opens into the small hallway with a door at the end of it. The hulk of a man sitting on a stool gives me a small nod then opens the door. A cloud of smoke hits me as I walk in. The guy on the piano is ticklin the ivories. A few dames are workin the room trying to dazzle a big shot egg to buy them a drink. I don't even look over at the VIP section. No one likes a nosey fella. I sit down in my favorite stool around the bar as the tender makes his way to me. He don't even bother askin' just pours the whiskey into a glass puttin' it in front of me. I throw down some coin and start to say thank you when I hear her.

"You got enough cush to buy me a drink Coop?" She says stepping to the bar back against it leaning on her elbows. I can't help but smile. I cock my chin up to get his attention.

"Gin Martini Darlin." She says, turning her head toward me a pill hanging off her long silver holder. I pull out a plain copper lighter sparking a flame for her. I don't smoke. I carry a lighter. I would be lying if I said it wasn't for her.

"How you doin tonight Lilli?" I ask, watching her puff on her then blow out a long stream of smoke.

"I don't know yet, stick around and I can give you an answer later." She replies, reaching for the martini glass between us taking a sip.

Lillian Palmer is like the opium they peddle across the way. I knew I should stay away but I get the itch to be around her and feel something besides boredom. I met her one night after drinking some bad moonshine...

She happened to be walking down the street when she saw me leaning against the wall, the burning in my gut makin me feel like I was about to see the pearly gates. I still don't know why she stopped to help me. I remember hearing the sound of her heels against the pavement as she passed by. After a few more steps she stopped. At first I thought she had met someone because I could hear her muttering something. I heard her sigh a beat later I felt her hand on my shoulder.

"We got to get you off the road Darlin'
You'll be spending the night in the joint

if a Button gets too close reeking of bad hooch." Everything got hazy after that. I woke up the next morning alone in a hotel room. A few weeks later I saw her here at The Evening Underground hanging off a guy that looked like her newest Daddy.

"Looks like you survived." She said to me later that night.

"I did thanks by the way."

"Coop whered ya go?" She asked pulling me out of my head.

"Just remembering the night we met."

Lilli laughed, taking another sip of her drink looking toward the VIP section.

"You got a new victim?" I asked, trying to keep the bitterness out of my voice. It's not like we are together. We hover on the edge but never take the leap.

Mostly because I think we don't want things to go south if we don't work out. I always say she deserves better than a schmuck from a one road town in Jersey. She always says the last thing I need is a witch from Salem.

"No waitin for The Fixer. The Suit said he wanted to see me." She took another drag of her cigarette and another sip of her martini.

Carmelo "The Fixer" was the consigliere for Giovanni "The Suit" mob boss of The Chicago Outfit. Every once and awhile The Fixer calls her over to sit with The Suit. One night I got the courage to ask what the deal was.

"It's to do with his son." Was all she said. I knew better than to dig, Giovanni's son was a subject hardly anyone brought up in fear that if you did you may not see the sunrise the next morning.

I wave my hand over the bartender pushing both of our empty glasses toward.

"Another for both of us." I request. I know Lilli needs it. Whatever they talk about makes her come back looking haunted. That's the only word I could use to describe the look in her gray eyes. I always wait when they call her over. She'll drink too much and ramble to strangers if I am not here. One of the regulars calls her "Lilli The Loon" because one night she got so drunk that she was talking to herself as if there was a person sitting there with her. A door opens from the other side of the club. I know without even looking it's Giovanni and Carmelo no one but them get the royal treatment. Looking over at Lilli I see her head lower, eyes fixed to the floor. I fight the urge to get her out of there. You didn't run from people like them, you just accepted fate if they requested your attendance.

There's a person coming toward us at first I can't make them out past the darkness and smoke. As they come closer I can see it's Carmelo.

A few long ticks later Lilli comes back. There's that look again. Like I said spooked haunted, throwin gin down her throat like she ain't ever had drink in her life. I watch as she closes her eyes.

"Ever think about leavin this place Coop?"

I grunt then shrug my shoulders.

"No since I don't have the cash to pick up and start over anywhere. You?"

She clears her throat eyes glassy lookin more put together.

"Paris... maybe New Orleans" she says

I try to act like her words don't get to me. I looked down at my hooch then turned to look at Lilli but she isn't there. She lammed off again like she always does when she feels like she's given too much away. The night goes off without a hitch and I get hoovin home.

The next morning I get to the job and pass a few desks where there are fellas who are hard at work. I slide through the entrance not every joe can go through. There standin in front of a wall filled with photos is my boss. He's going to ask the same questions he always throws at me. I'm ready to spout off what I might have gathered.

I stop my blood feeling ice going down my veins. Right in the center is a picture of Lillian. My boss turns givin' me nod, jerking his chin toward the pic of Lilli.

"Agent Cooper what have you got on this Dame? Possible recruit?"

I look at Lilli's picture torn between duty and desire knowing I only had a few more ticks to decide...

CHICAGO

Chicago, otherwise known as The Second City, is up for debate as to the origin of this particular moniker. Some say it is because of The Great Fire of 1871 that wiped out most of the original city. Which caused city planners to rebuild from the ground up. The other theory much to the chagrin of most Chicagoans, derives from it being the second biggest metropolitan city in the country. Whichever it is, there is no denying that no city rivals Chicago right now or what we call The Roaring 20's.

Whether it be The Mob or the lackadaisical attitude of local government officials, the city is known for its infamy and disregard for Prohibition sanctions. While the Prohibition is in effect in the rest of the United States, Chicago has become the mecca of the midwest. People from different walks of life converge here seeking fortune even if it means being entangled with the mob.

One misconception when it came to Chicago's mafia lore was that it was run by one monolithic mob. Instead, there were numerous gangs, mostly Irish and Italian, fighting for control of bootlegging, gambling, and other rackets. That was until the mid twenties when two prominent figures rose above the mire.

Giovanni 'The Suit' Rossi

The Mob Boss for The Chicago Outfit. Started from being a Bouncer in one of Cesare Valentino's brothels. Quickly rose in the ranks taking over for Cesare when he suddenly decided to retire and return to the Old Country. Ruthless and deadly when it comes to those who anger or dare to challenge him. Yet an anti-hero to the locals. Funding various charities and donating to the Catholic Church.

Kenneth Monroe

Chief of The Chicago Police Force. Notoriously corrupt. Plays both sides of the fence for the O'Neill Gang and the Chicago Outfit. He's known for making crime scenes disappear and burying evidence. His morning Roll Call one-on-ones seem to rewire a rookie's moral compass on the spot. Somehow turning seemingly honest cops into devoted disciples, ensuring the precinct is always shaped to fit his personal agenda.

Collin Fitzgerald

Since the Mayor is constantly lost in brothels and opium dens, Collin effectively runs the city himself. He isn't entirely corrupt and still maintains a firm moral bottom line when it comes to the average joes of the city. However, a dark scandal from early in his career remains mysteriously censored and buried. He manages chaos while hiding his secrets.

The Evening Underground

Located under The Wastons & Wolf Department Store. Very few people in Chicago are unaware of The Evening Underground. However it is difficult for the Average Joe to gain entrance into this Speakeasy even if you know the secret knock.(The first few bars of Eddie Cantor's "If You Knew Susie, Like I know Susie). Murmurs and soft jazz music fill the air. The furniture is a collection of plush armchairs, low-slung sofas, and high-backed booths, all upholstered in jewel-toned fabrics The amber lighting provides a sensual ambiance. With overflowing ashtrays and half-finished drinks on the tables In the very center is a stage with a microphone at the center, an upright piano to it's left side and a few stands and chairs for brass accompaniments.

Behind the bar, a long stretch of gleaming mahogany, usually stands Dante Ricci- Manager of The Evening Underground. He expertly mixes drinks as he listens in or converses with the clients. Always looking for the upper hand to assist the club's sponsors The walls are bathed in Velvet. With VIP booths in the corner. If you look closely enough you can make out what looks like to be cutouts in the walls over the VIP section. Enough to get the end of a shotgun out with a bit of room to aim. After all, the Speakeasy is funded by The Chicago Outfit.

Preferred place to unwind for Giovanni 'The Suit' Rossi. If you find yourself in the office in the back you have gained the attention of Carmelo 'The Fixer' Fontana. Primary place where he conducts meetings, negotiations or "education". Fern "Melody" Mabbitt is their songstress and headliner frequently on the arm of Giovanni. Most politicians, especially aldermen are here nightly. The club makes sure there is a steady stream of Flappers hanging about to keep their clients entertained and happy. Frequently paying off local law enforcement to look the other way. Reporting to Carmelo every time he senses something is off the clientele. Spending time at The Evening Underground is a double edged sword. Some gain the notoriety they ache for. Some can find themselves indebted to The Chicago Outfit on the whim of Carmelo or Dante. Others find themselves drawn there by the entrancing and alluring Melody.

Jubilee

The opium den is a world of hushed tones. Across the street from The Evening Underground. Is what appears to be a tailor shop. Once you enter you see a heavy wooden door, unmarked and unassuming. As you step inside, you're met with a thick cloud of sweet, cloying smoke that stings your eyes.

The air is thick and almost stagnant. The only lighting provided is the flickering, golden glow of opium lamps. Furnishings are sparse and low-lying – worn divans piled with threadbare cushions, and heavy opium pillows stacked along the walls. The clientele reclines in various states of undress, draped languorously across the divans, their faces pale and glazed in the dim light.

The smell of singed opium mingles with the stale smoke and the underlying musk of sweat and despair. The only sounds are the gurgling of the opium lamps, the occasional cough from a smoker, and the soft murmur of conversation in hushed tones.

Beihe Chanxin The Owner of Jubilee usually shrouds herself in partial darkness, moves silently from patron to patron, refilling pipes and collecting payment in hushed transactions. Sometimes starting conversations with more well known patrons trying to see if she could extract secrets in their hazy dreamlike state. A hidden haven for those who seek more intense pleasures that come at a steep price.

The Knuckles Up Boxing Club

A place of grit but also potential glamor, and the ever-present hope of a knockout that could change everything. Run by Connor Doyle who has been training boxers since the early 20's. Inside there are exposed brick walls painted a kelly green, a not so subtle reminder that the club is owned by a proud Irishman. Plastered on the wall are fight posters featuring champions that Connor has trained. Dim lights cast long shadows across the room with a boxing ring at the center of it.

The air hangs thick with the smell of sweat and leather. Off to the side are worn heavy bags, some patched and scarred, swing from the rafters. Boxers, wrapped in hand mitts or pounding the bags bare-knuckled, grunt. The lighting is dim, with flickering bulbs. This wasn't just for atmosphere, but it also to make it harder for boxers to see punches coming in training, a skill they'd need in the ring.

The club's members are a motley bunch. Coming from everywhere in the city. Young hopefuls with dreams of glory rubbing shoulders with seasoned veterans, some past their prime but still clinging to the ring. Trying to capture their past glory. While Connor is a proud Irishman, he trains anyone he sees potential in. Known for fight nights that are not rigged. Many come and place bets hoping to cash out big. Mafia Bosses and new immigrants often fill the club.

Oh the second floor is an office occupied by Maggie Doyle. Most ignore the steady stream of people coming in with sacks as well as the frequent visits from Sully Kelly.

The Stone Cork Pub

Hidden behind a store front facade with a sign that reads "McMurray's Cobbler's Bench with stacks of shoe boxes covering the windows. The front room looks like a shoe repair shop however behind a sliding wall of shoes is The Stone Cork Pub. Catering to the working class, the decor is more bare-bones, with flickering gaslight, rough wooden tables, dark wood paneling, brass fittings, and worn leather stools.

On the walls hang paintings of The Cliffs of Moher, The Ring of Kerry and Newgrange, The 5,000 year-old Tomb of Irish Kings which if glanced at most Irishmen will tell you it is older than both The Giza Pyramids And Stonehenge.

Besides ale, bathtub gin and bootleg whiskey is served here. Sully Kelly is usually found here recruiting newly arrived immigrants to do odd jobs and various dubious runs for Finn O'Neill. There is a lone piano and a set of bag pipes. Sometimes on special occasions you can find Maggie Doyle singing Caoineadh songs. (Songs that are laments of sorrow and pain. Typically around the forced migration from their beloved homeland.)

T.W. Savings And Loans

The largest Bank in Chicago the doors are made of polished brass The walls lined with mahogany paneling, accented with gleaming brass fixtures. High ceilings with ornate plasterwork, and large windows. The lobby has marble floors and columns. As you walk there is a long row of brass-railing teller cages. To the back is a gate made of bars that lead you to the large vault with a large imposing wheel.

On the other side are three oak carved desks and a small velvet sofa. Considered neutral ground to provide a place for workers of all walks of life. Former work place of Maggie Doyle.

Under the watchful eye of Collin Fitzgerald this particular bank is instructed to remain neutral in regards to the mob wars. At the same time provide both organizations additional "Tailored Services".

There was no anti-money laundering law. This lack of regulation made it much easier for illicit funds to flow through the financial system without detection. T.W. Savings And Loans is filled with. Corrupt Bankers and Bank Employees: While not all bankers were complicit, some were undoubtedly on the take. They would accept large cash deposits without asking questions, facilitate transfers, or even create fictitious loans to move money around. Whether it be under the table loans, investing in "Legitimate" Businesses or facilitating loan shark connections. This financial institution is known for both its prestige and infamy.

Chicago Police Headquarters

Headed by Kenneth Monroe, who would go down in history as the most corrupt Chief of Police in American History. The Clink is busy and bustling, filled with officers in uniform constantly coming and going. There is a central desk or bullpen area where officers reported for duty, received assignments, and filled out paperwork. Firearms mounted in the walls for easy access during times of crisis. Detectives have their own separate offices.. A small room as you enter houses photographic equipment for mugshots. To the left is a gym for training and fitness and a shooting gallery. The cells are in the basement.

Because of the underlying acceptance of organized crime, the majority of police work still involved dealing with "public disorder." Officers arrested thousands of drunks and vagrants, controlled traffic, helped pedestrians, returned lost children, and addressed various minor infractions. They also served as a visible presence to maintain order on their beats.

Behind the back was a small area that was nicknamed "The smoking lounge" This was an area where cops on the take often met with their mob connections. Also a place where cops on the take often "educated" rookies and do-gooders attempting to interfere in the name of justice when it came to regulating the Mobs.

Delancy's Diner

A converted train car in the front connected to a small free standing building Outside the diner is a neon sign buzzing with the Delancy's Diner in bright red letters. The counter seating is red vinyl lining a long counter made of stainless steel Chrome accents trim the counter and the edges of the booths. As you walk in there is a large copper cash register with cigarettes for sale in a stack on the furthest side. A large coffee urn centered and behind the counter. Where a small window right above it for food to be passed through. In the far corner sits a steel jukebox with the word audiophone in large font.

Delancy's was a busy place, especially during peak meal times, catering to workers, travelers and both mob enforcers and patrolmen working their beat. The clatter of dishes, sizzle of grills, and chatter of patrons offered a cover for more illicit conversations. Journalists trying to squeeze information out of unsuspecting citizens who may or may not know there might have seen something that could be front page news.

However, in the late night the place would slow down. Whispers of Chicago's darkest secrets could be heard from someone trying to fill up on coffee after a hard night at the speakeasy. Wet behind the ears newshawks and sob sisters sit in darker corners trying to get an earful of the latest gossip. New or lost souls look out windows from a booth into the darkness wondering what the city has in store for them when the sun rises.

Wrigley Field

Originally called Weeghman Park after its developer, Charles Weeghman, in 1920 the Wrigley family purchased the Chicago Cubs. Since then the Stadium is called Wrigley's Field much to the chagrin of Mr Weeghman. The stadium itself has a reputation for having "Friendly Confines" feel even with the rapid organized crime all around it. The outfield walls are bare brick with white sacks to act as bases. To the left over the home dugout with two stools for scorekeepers to work the numbers as a game is played. The closest seats are well maintained. Above them the seating is crude wooden benches.

While considered non-hostile within the mob wars the park itself was at the center of O'Neill gang territory. And with the help of the Irish Mob, the stadium has begun to expand adding an upper deck newly built, making a strong argument that it was a superior stadium to Comiskey Field.

Beyond the outfield walls, the tall residential buildings now, famous rooftop views. Where people who could not afford tickets could watch the game from a relatively close distance.

Within the stadium next to a food stand on the left side of the field stands a small stall. This tiny spot was the center of all sports betting in Chicago. Begrudgingly the Italian Mafia needed to come into enemy territory for betting.

St Augustine Church

The biggest church in Chicago considered neutral ground for both the Irish and The Italian Mobs. It is secretly understood that the 10 am Mass is for the Italian Mobs with the 1pm Mass being for members of The Irish Mobs. The appearance outside resembles Gothic Revival style with spires and stained glass windows. The pews are made of mahogany wood on each side of the center aisle, facing a raised pulpit and an altar adorned with traditional Catholic symbols. There are several chandeliers above the pews to provide lighting instead of gas lights or any real modern electricity. The stained glass windows depict biblical scenes with statues of Saints centered between the windows with a small pew in front of them to pray to the Saints. Lining the walls are several small tea candle lights with a small collection box to pay to light one of the candles.

Saint Augustine's is lavishly and richly decorated with intricate murals. Undoubtedly because of the donations provided by both the Chicago Outfit and The O'Neill Gang. The air inside is thick with the scent of incense, and sunlight streaming through the stained glass would cast colorful patterns across the pews.

Both heads of rival gangs respected this building more than any other in the city. Both hold events to donate to the church going community. Speaking of mob business within the house of worship was the greatest sin within the organizations. The police often find unfortunate victims with a bullet in their head nearby however not so close to desecrate the church grounds.

The Outfit and The O'Neill gang abided by one rule, if members of either organizations went to confession they could not be targeted.

The priests of Saint Augustine understood the position they were in and often were referred to as "the most pious" within the priesthood in the United States.

FBI Headquarters

When the Chicago Federal building is home to the FBI Headquarters in Chicago, this small unit is located on the 8th floor of the Steuben Club Building. The outside sign reads "Winston's Accounting firm." As you enter you see three desks with ledgers on them and a Burroughs Portable Adding Machine on the other side. A large bookshelf is on the right side. Behind that is a secret office space where the FBI operates. Four small offices and a large conference room with a large board with various pictures of suspects is housed here.

The office is staffed by special agents and support personnel, working on "special" investigations that often involve complex and intricate planning. Agent Kyle Cooper works from this office. There are two rooms outside the few offices tucked away in the back and one war room.

One room has a single table in the center of it with a chair on either side. There is a one way mirror on the far back wall that seems to extend to the next room. Running down the center of the table is a large mesh wire lattice screen similar to a confessional privacy screen. Preventing the interrogator and suspect from being seen by the other. The room itself is nearly bare. The only other fixture is hooks drilled into the wall. Hanging up are shackles attached to large chains normally used in law enforcement to restrain more violent suspects.

The second room looks to be a makeshift hospital room with a bed and restraints in the center of it. The one way mirror extends into this room. On the side in a large steel cabinet locked holding various medications and instruments the whole room seems out of place. A room that no normal FBI Unit would have. The agents have nicknamed it "The Persuasion Chamber"

Chi-Town Amusement Park

Owned and operated by Ambrose Burkett and his family. The entire park is inspired by the World's Columbian Exposition capturing the grandeur of the 1893 World's Fair. With a miniature grand basin at the entrance. Various food stalls and souvenir booths are in a row running down the sides of the basin. There is a ticket booth as you enter the call gate to pay a fee to enter and several booths around the park to purchase tickets for the rides. Several game booths such as a Milk Bottle Toss, Apple Basket Toss, a guessing booth and a High Striker commonly known as the Strong Man are to the left and right as you pass the basin and make your way into the park. A large carousel is at the center of the park with bumper cars and a balloon race ride aligning. Further into the park is the Fun house and Haunted House building. As well as a Tunnel of Love. There is a stage and dance area for events that feature a large light tower illuminating the area behind the Ferris Wheel tucked away in the very back of the park.

Ambrose Burkett's fame is known around town. Being a prominent leader within the black community. Mysteriously, the police seem to be unneeded as Ambrose has a way of facilitating any trouble.

Priding himself on safe family fun, guests are checked for weapons and alcohol is not permitted during the daytime hours. Ambrose tends to look the other way for nighttime events happening in the dance area.

Both the Irish and Italian Mafia respect Ambrose. Neither organization brings trouble to his doorstep.

Chicago Tribune

The office has a hazy layer of smoke as you walk in the doors. Ashtrays with cigar and cigarette butts overflow on desks and throughout the common areas. The main workspace is filled with wooden desks, each occupied by a reporter hunched over a noisy typewriter. Papers are strewn across desks, filled with notes in a small room across from the editors office is a room with a dictaphone for reporters to record interviews. With a phone next to it. To the left of that is the city room, a large open space with a large bulletin board might display breaking news headlines or upcoming assignments, where reporters, editors, and copy editors hold company meetings.

The clatter of dozens of typewriters are heard mixed with the ringing of telephones, the shouting of editors, and the general hum of constant chaotic activity. Reporters were constantly on the phone, interviewing sources or dictating stories. Copyboys would rush between desks, delivering freshly typed copies of articles to editors for approval. Far off on the back wall are teletype machines that constantly chatter, spitting out wire service reports from around the world, providing material for the day's news. Next to them are several telegraph machines

In the very back is the printing press room where the noise of the printing presses could be heard as large rolls of paper are fed into massive machines that printed, folded, and cut thousands of newspapers an hour. The smell of printer ink is nearly intoxicating.

The Tribune's reputation has its ups and down. The rise of sensationalism has begun. The tension between hard-nosed reporters and gossip columnists could be felt as both compete to make the front page.

The newspaper at times does report on the darker on-goings of Chicago but are careful to not cross a line that could get them standing on the DuSable Bridge wearing cement shoes.

ORGANIZATIONS & FACTIONS OF CHICAGO

The Chicago Mob

The Original Good Fellas

While most people associate the rise of the Chicago Mob with the Roaring Twenties, that is, in fact, a fallacy. The foundations of organized crime in Chicago had been established since the early 1900s, but it was Prohibition that truly allowed it to gain infamous wealth and power.

The early organization was run by figures like Cesare Valentino. The story of his succession involves two ambitious immigrants: Giovanni "The Suit" Rossi and Carmelo "The Fixer" Fontana. They supposedly came from Italy seeking the American Dream, starting as mere lackeys and bouncers for Valentino. They eventually worked their way up the ranks, becoming the Outfit's new Front Boss and Underboss, respectively.

Contrary to the sensationalist stories reported in the local newspapers, the handover of power was surprisingly peaceful. Cesare Valentino willingly stepped down, passing the organization to Giovanni Rossi without the violence and chaos often assumed.

Once in power, the truth about Rossi and Fontana was revealed: they were not poor immigrants. They hailed from wealthy families tied to the Italian Cosa Nostra. This meant that money was funneled into the Chicago operation quickly and in large sums. When Prohibition hit, they were already well-established and poised to profit massively. Thanks to their extensive connections in the Old World, illegal alcohol was easily secured, putting them far ahead of their rivals.

The O'Neill Gang

North Side Power

Unlike the sophisticated, established Italian-American syndicate known as The Outfit, the O'Neill Gang began with absolutely nothing, building their organization from the ground up to become a force strong enough to compete directly with the Italian Mafia.

The gang's rise is credited to its founder, Sullivan "Sully" Kelly. Kelly arrived in Chicago with his family as a young boy, fleeing the poverty and devastation of the Irish Potato Famine. He found his start working on the bustling North Docks, a dangerous and lucrative environment. Kelly quickly made a name for himself, establishing dominance through sheer force and loyalty, recruiting trusted Irish aides to help him run the burgeoning operation.

While The Outfit often maintained a sharp, high-profile image, The O'Neill Gang preferred to operate with a different flair. Though they certainly could afford to "dress to the nines," they were often more comfortable in their grimy, everyday apparel. This preference served a practical purpose: it allowed them to blend in easily with dockworkers and laborers, making it far simpler to play off their criminal activities as legitimate business when they were conducting their illicit operations across the North Side.

Chicago Unions

A Dangerous Necessity

The rise of powerful labor unions in 1920s Chicago was a necessary response to genuinely dangerous and frequently fatal work conditions. In the rapidly expanding industrial and construction sectors, safety regulations were often minimal or ignored, making the workplace a constant threat to life and limb. Workers understood that without collective action, a single accident or illness could wipe out a family's livelihood or, literally, an entire generation of laborers.

The two union groups that gained the most influence, The Teamsters Union, who controlled the movement of goods from raw materials to finished products. And The Building Trades Unions. Their control over the constant construction boom gave them leverage over powerful real estate and financial interests.

The struggle to keep these unions organized and effective was a continuous battle. Union efforts were constantly at war with powerful factory owners, investors, and industrial barons who employed aggressive tactics including using private detectives, police intimidation, and blacklisting to destroy union organizing efforts and maintain low wages.

It is within this volatile environment that organized crime, led by the Chicago Outfit and The O'Neill Gang, shimmied its way in. The unions, seeking protection and the two rival gangs seeking profit, found a dangerous synergy

Initially, mob figures began acting as "enforcers" or "protectors" for vulnerable union locals. They offered a swift, brutal form of security against strikebreakers or the rival gang trying to move in. This quickly turned into racketeering. Gangsters systematically began bribing, intimidating, or killing Union leaders to put their own people into play .

Union control provided both gangs with a reliable, legal looking revenue stream and the logistical muscle they needed to dominate the city.

Chicago Law Enforcement

A Decade of Disaster

During the 1920s, law enforcement in Chicago became a massive liability and, to many citizens, a complete joke. Organized crime figures openly thumbed their noses at the police, knowing they operated with near-impunity. Consequently, the average Chicagoan had little to no confidence that the police force could or would protect them and keep the streets free from crime. The depth of the corruption was staggering, fundamentally crippling the ability of the police to enforce Prohibition.

Many policemen, often drawn from humble backgrounds, including farming towns or recent immigrant communities, had never seen the wads of cash that gangs were throwing around. Bribes were not just large; they were a systematic operational cost for the mob.

Organized crime used these bribes to ensure their businesses were kept under wraps, secure early tip-offs about planned raids, and guarantee that arrested mobsters were swiftly released or had their charges dropped. This corruption extended far beyond the beat cop, reaching up into the ranks of police captains, lieutenants, and even political figures.

For the honest police officer, the environment was deadly and demoralizing. "Do-gooder" cops faced an impossible choice: either join the corrupt system and accept the bribes "being on the take" or getting fitted for cement shoes.

The lack of effective local law enforcement was ultimately why federal agencies, such as the FBI had to step in and apply the pressure that local police could not.

The FBI in Chicago

Heroes, Villains, and the Hidden Agenda

During the 1920s, the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), though still a relatively young agency, made its presence strongly felt in Chicago. To the average citizen, the Bureau was viewed by some as heroes for the raids on massive illegal alcohol operations and the high profile arrests of mob figures, providing a contrast to the notoriously corrupt local police. To others, particularly those who relied on the illicit economy, the FBI were villains federal meddlers disrupting local affairs.

In the midst of the public legal statements, which saw agents occasionally making a splash by raiding gang storage houses or seizing bootlegging operations, a deeper secret was harbored within the federal ranks. While the press focused on the few agents who might one day earn the nickname "Federal Untouchables" for battling the mob, the Bureau had a hidden agenda.

Unknown to the public, the FBI was operating the ultra-secretive Project MK-Alpha. The primary focus of MK-Alpha was the confirmation and weaponization of human beings gifted with supernatural powers. It was not merely believed that these abilities existed they were desperately wanted. The goal was to study them and find ways to develop a militarily stronger America, a national priority especially in the post World War I era.

The FBI observed and tracked anyone in Chicago who showed even the slightest evidence of extraordinary abilities. If the reports looked legitimate, agents would swiftly round them up and bring them in for "questioning". Some detainees were eventually released after it was confirmed they were ordinary people with no special gifts. The rest were not so fortunate. These individuals either "volunteered" to work for the government, aiding them in clandestine operations, or were subjected to rigorous, often unethical, experimentation to unlock the full potential of their powers all in the name of national security.

CHICAGO ONE SHOTS

Of all things that Chicago is, short on stories isn't one of them. Thousands upon thousands of stories of mystery, romance, intrigue, danger, and mayhem can be told among the towering buildings of the Windy City. We have prepared two of them for you, ready to run.

Both these adventures can be used as standalone one shots or slotted into a campaign. They are both intended for 3-5 characters built with 25 experience, however a party with more experience should still have a fun mystery to solve in either one.

You May Now Kill the Groom

When you say the wedding went off with a bang you usually don't mean it literally. When the party attends a mob wedding chaos erupts when the best man murders the groom in cold blood. But something doesn't add up. He had means, and opportunity... But not the ever important motive, at least as far as anyone knows. While most mysteries are simply a 'who done it,' this one is a 'why done it.'

Them Graveyard Words

Spooky things have started happening at the Chi-town Amusement Park, and the characters have gotten a favor called in from Ambrose, a guy who never calls in his favors. They find themselves exploring a dark and mysterious amusement park late at night where unexplainable things begin to happen. What could possibly go wrong? Can they figure out what is going on and put an end to it?

YOU MAY NOW KILL THE GROOM

"I begin to see what marriage is for. It's to keep people away from each other. Sometimes I think that two people who love each other can be saved from madness only by the things that come between them..."

- Edith Wharton

There is a saying "Happy is the bride that the sun shines on" What most folks don't know is alongside that joyous phrase, is its counterpart "Happy is the corpse that the rain falls on" Obviously we hope for a sun shining happy day. However, given the parties making their way into the church, the latter might just be the thing,

There is a mass of folks standing outside of Saint Augustine's church. Some average joes anklin' it all the way from the other side of town, to catch a glimpse of what was happening inside. Police cars sitting outside the church blocking cars from coming down the street. Packin more heat than most of the on-lookers have ever seen. If you didn't know better than you would think it was a police barricade. But that's not what's happenin today.

The bells of the clang loudly from the bell tower announcing the top of the hour murmurs are heard from the crowd.

"You think this thing goes off without a hitch?" One person asks. "I sure hope so." Another one says.

The folks standing in the front tryin to peep through the door to see if they could catch a glimpse of the action inside.

You are sitting there on a pew looking back and forth the tension in the air is palpable. Looking down you see your invitation. Without it there's no way you could have made it in the door. It's heavy eggshell card stock decorated with the art-deco that is all the rage. You read...

One Shot Synopsis

In 1920s Chicago, a “peace treaty” wedding between the Italian Mob and the Irish Gang goes south fast when the best man suddenly guns down the groom right at the altar. Don Giovanni “The Suit” Rossi isn’t buying that it was just a random act of violence, so he rounds up the party who all owe him money to find out who was really pulling the strings. The trail leads the party to various locations in the city Eventually revealing that a lounge singer named Sapphire used hypnotic “Blu” smokes to brainwash the shooter. She staged the whole execution as a bloody distraction so she could slip away with the mob’s cash, leaving the players to track her down at The Evening Underground to settle the score and clear their debts with the Don.

Act One:

The party attends the wedding of Vinnie Rossie and Siobhan Fitzgerald. They have great seats to watch as Vinnie is shot by his best man, Luka Fontana. Police question people, the party included.

They are then summoned by the Don, a man who they owe a favor to. They are asked to dig into what happened. Obviously everyone knows who did it, but the Don isn’t convinced they have the full story.

Act Two:

The Party investigates various locations around Chicago, talking to people, snooping around, and generally looking for clues. Right now they have 3 obvious places to go to.

The Church, The Jail, The Fontana House

Act Three:

In Act Three the investigation takes them to a few more places, hinted at in act two. The bank, an opium den, and eventually the Evening Underground, where they confront Sapphire, and try to bring her in.

ACT I: The Wedding and the Shot

Scene 1: The Church Aisle

GM NOTE: Give player intros. Ask the party:

Which side of the conflict (The Outfit or The O'Neill Gang) are you still allied with or closest to? (Even if they are officially neutral, their loyalty/connection matters.)

How do you feel about being at this wedding? (Uneasy, dutiful, hopeful, etc.)

The air in Saint Augustine Church is thick, not just with incense, but with barely contained hostility. You can feel the weight of every gaze exchanged across the aisle. This wedding, uniting Siobhan Fitzgerald, daughter of a Deputy Mayor, and Vinfrido "Vinnie" Rossi, son of Giovanni "The Suit" Rossi, Don of The Chicago Outfit, is an unprecedented truce in the mob war between The Chicago Outfit and The O'Neill Gang.

On the bride's side sit politicians, including Mayor Franklin Tracey, and the feared boss, Finn O'Neill, flanked by his right-hand man, Connor, and several gang members. Across the aisle, Giovanni 'The Suit' Rossi wears a perfectly tailored mask of patriarchal pride, mirroring the forced dignity of Finn O'Neill. Alongside him are his Consigliere, Carmelo 'The Fixer' Fontana, and several of their soldiers.

Their crews, however, are less subtle; young men on both sides shift on their feet, their eyes hard and fixed on their rivals.

Call for an Notice roll. Anyone who gets 15 or better notices...

Looking closely at the four groomsmen (excluding Vinnie and Luka), their suits seem in disarray. They are pale, their movements appear sluggish, and their eyes are a glossy, bloodshot mix. It's a dazed, sickly look: heavy alcohol consumption combined with the glassy, relaxed effect of opium. They are physically present, but their minds are clearly reeling.

While the groomsmen look bedraggled, Vinnie Rossi is perfection. His movements are sharp, his posture impeccable, and his eyes are bright, focused entirely on Siobhan. He is completely alert and locked in, radiating sobriety and excitement, looking every inch the dapper gentleman ready to start his new life.

Luka Fontana, Vinnie's best man, is somewhere between the two extremes. Though he, too, looks tired, he is engaged. You see him lean over to Vinnie, whispering something that makes the groom flash a wide smile. Luka chuckles softly, reaches over, and squeezes Vinnie's shoulder. It is widely known that these two, friends since birth, are as close as brothers.

The ceremony continues...

The tension in the room seems to subside as the priest finishes the final prayer, and the room holds its breath. The Priest announces: "You may now kiss the bride."

You see Vinnie turn to Siobhan, his face alight with delirious happiness, and they exchange a long, loving kiss. The room erupts, a momentary, false wave of relief and cheers. As Siobhan goes to hug her Maid of Honor, Vinnie turns to embrace his best man, Luka Fontana.

Call for another Notice roll. Anyone who gets 20 or better notices...

You see Luka's demeanor seems to change. As Vinnie pulls away slightly, Luka blinks a few times, then gets a dazed, confused look in his eyes.

Before anyone has a chance to do anything other than shout a warning the dirty deed is already underway.

Luka Fontana stands there, frozen. The pistol is in his hand, a thin trail of smoke curling from the barrel. His earlier smile is gone, replaced by a dazed, utterly vacant stare. His arm is still extended, almost as if he does not realize he just fired a shot. A dark stain blooms across Vinnie's white shirt. He collapses. Siobhan's scream follows, a sound of absolute, raw agony. Luka's eyes snap into focus, clearing instantly as he looks down at the smoking gun, then at his best friend's body. The gun clatters to the marble as a desperate wail rips from his throat.

Call for an Empathy roll. Anyone who gets a 12 or higher intuit...

Just looking at Luka, you can see that he is visibly confused, his actions moments ago completely baffling him. The Groomsmen look horrified. It's chaos as dozens of guns are drawn on both sides, pointed across the aisle.

Allow another beat for player action.

You can almost hear a pin drop if it weren't for the labored breaths and the clicking of gun safeties being taken off. Before the massacre can start, the police crash through the doors. Luka, shattered and weeping, is dragged away in cuffs. Finn O'Neill and Giovanni 'The Suit' Rossi are ushered away with bodyguards all around them. You look toward the altar and see Siobhan holding Vinnie in her arms, her dress now covered in blood, with her parents trying to pull her away.

Scene 2: Summons by the Don

A group of police officers enter and start to question people, each character who is still within the church is questioned and asked to give an account of what they saw by a tired detective before being sent to the exit.

As each of you leaves the church, you feel a tap on your shoulder and see a tall, burly man who looks like he could snap your neck with one hand. They hold out their hand, ushering you toward a large black car.

Any characters who already slipped out are also given a similar 'invitation' to the car.

Call for an investigation roll, Anyone with mob connections gets a +5 bonus. If they get a 15 or higher they realize...

The tall, intimidating man in front of you is none other than Salvador D'Alonzo, 'Silent Sal.' He is The Suit's most trusted street soldier and bodyguard.

Otherwise...

He is clearly a formidable bodyguard for a major figure in the Outfit, his gaze heavy and unsettling.

The party is driven across town to the Rossi estate where they are told to wait in the sitting room, but it is only about 10 minutes before Salvador D'Alonzo returns for them.

"Mr. Rossi is ready to see you now." This is not an invitation that you can decline. Seeing The Suit is a frightening foregone conclusion.
Scene 3: The Don's Office

Salvador D'Alonzo, 'Silent Sal' joins the party as a non-player character (NPC). Sal is powerful, observant, and subtly works to keep the party on a short leash.

You are ushered through a gauntlet of sharply dressed guards and into the private office of Giovanni 'The Suit' Mancini, the Don himself. The room is an ostentatious display of wealth and power. Giovanni is seated behind a massive mahogany desk, casually sipping an amber liquid from a crystal glass, a lit cigar held loosely in his other hand. Silent Sal walks in first, taking up his position next to The Don. Giovanni waves a hand, indicating you should stand. He takes a long drag from his cigar, exhales a plume of smoke, and sets the glass down with a slight clink. "The events of last night at St. Augustine's... they insult my intelligence. They don't make sense. I need to know why. And I need to know who."

Call for an Empathy roll. Anyone who gets a 15 or better intuit's... Giovanni appears genuinely befuddled; the boys were truly like brothers. He seems to believe something made Luka do it, not that he did it willingly.

Call for a Notice roll. Anyone who gets a 15 or better notices...

- He is wearing a ring that has the All-Seeing Eye etched on it, indicating he believes in or is concerned with the supernatural/occult.
- Framed photographs on the mantle show Vinnie and Luka through all their stages of life, reaffirming their closeness.

He looks you over, his gaze sharp and intimidating, "You investigate this. You find the truth. And if you deliver it, you walk away with every last one of your debts to the family cleared. Consider this your one-time, non-negotiable opportunity. As it stands you've got three leads to chase... The church, The station where Luka is held, and the Fontana house." He nods toward Silent Sal, who takes one step forward, his expression unreadable.

"Sal goes with you. He is my eyes and my muscle. He will make sure you don't step out of line, and he will ensure the job gets done. You bring me the truth."

ACT II: The Investigation

Act II will have the party moving around town investigation various points of interest relevant to the case. They do not need to visit these locations in the order presented in this chapter. Additionally it is possible to figure out where they should go next without going to all of the locations. If they do not go to the Fontana house, instead have the hitman arrive when the group is leaving Jubilee.

Location 1: Saint Augustine Church

The vaulted ceilings of the church amplify the relentless scrubbing of the nuns. They are spectral figures in black and white, mumbling Latin prayers over the stone floor, their eyes fixed on the spot where the blood of Vinnie Fontana stained the altar.
Interrogating the Nuns:

If the Nuns are questioned, the following info can be obtained:

- The bride's party got ready in the room stage right (next to the altar). The groom's party got ready in the room stage left.
- All three (bride, groom, assailant) were fixtures in the church and got along very well.
- Luka was acting differently the last few weeks. He had not gone to confession, and he looked lovelorn to them.

The Bridal Room (Stage Right)

As you open the door, you are hit by the scent of rosewater and heavy French perfume. The bridesmaids' dresses hang neatly on a rack. The small vanity is riddled with makeup.

Siobhan's bible is on a table, with rosewater spilled all over it, wetting a soggy slip of paper inside.

The handwriting is rushed and smeared. Words are difficult to make out: "What you can make it," "It feels so impossible.. not giving up on me..." The final line is: "I promise to stay by your side forever. Never doubt I am the man for you"

If they got a 15 or higher on that investigation roll and they already found the letter in Luka's room (location 3: the Fontana house), they can tell that the handwriting is not the same as Luka's.

The Groom's Room (Stage Left)

The room where Vinnie and his groomsmen got ready looks as if a tornado hit it. The smell of cologne is overwhelmed by the smell of liquor. Men's clothes are haphazardly cast aside, with cigars and cigarettes littered in an ashtray. On a small side table, there are three empty flasks. Beneath the mess, the air is faintly sweet, cloying, and out of the ordinary.

Call for an investigation roll. On a 12 or higher they find...

- Expensive Cigars: Two look just barely lit, with a gold band.
- Cigarette/Cigarillo Butts: Four are common brands. However, one cigarillo butt is distinct, the brand name is burned, but the end is a sky-blue color.
- Distinct Scent: The heavy, sweet scent is opium. Three jackets are saturated with the scent. One smells only slightly of it. One only smells of cigarettes.
- Matchbook: Labeled 'Jubilee,' found in a jacket pocket or on the floor under the table.

Location 2: The Precinct - Police Station

The air is heavy with the faint scent of stale cigar smoke. The worn linoleum floor attests to heavy foot traffic.

At first the police don't let the group through to speak to Luka. A difficulty 15 social check can get them through.

If they are unable to, Sal will flash a ring and the cop will sheepishly usher them in, evidently on the take.

If Luka is questioned...

I just killed my best friend and brother. Broke the heart of a girl I loved like a sister. How do you think I feel?"

If they ask what he remembers...

"I... I don't remember anything after the toast, the one for 'Kiss the Bride.' The next thing I knew, my hands were bloody, and Siobhan... Siobhan was screaming, holding Vinnie."

If they ask about Jubilee Luka shamefully admits he frequented the Opium Den. He and the rest of Vinnie's groomsman strong armed the groom to start the night off there.

If someone makes an Empathy roll above a 13 they can tell that Luka is genuinely horrified and confused. He is telling the truth as he remembers it.

Location 3: The Fontana House

As you approach and walk into the Fontana home, the very air of the receiving area speaks of Old Money. The floor is marble, and the walls are covered with silk damask wallpaper. A grand console table holds an elaborate floral arrangement. Luka's father, stoic and guarded is there.

The party must negotiate their way into Luka's room with a social roll of 15 or higher. (Or 10 if they mention working for the Don.)

Luka's Room

- Unfinished Love Letter: On his small writing desk.
"I wish you could feel how much I love you. I would do anything for you. Tell me how I can prove it?" Don't you doubt I am the man for you."
- Safety Deposit Box Key: In a small box in his closet. It has the words T&W etched into it.

Anyone who rolls an investigation of 15 or higher can also find...

- Matchbook: Labeled 'Jubilee' found in one of his coat pockets.
- Cigarillos: A huge supply of cigarillos, the brand on the box says 'Blu'. There is an absurd amount of boxes in this drawer.

Leaving the House - Ambush

When the party leaves the house to head to the next location, just before getting to the car...

Walking towards you is a man that from afar looks like he is walking with a limp.

Allow them a chance to roll notice or empathy.

Notice 15+

He is wearing a trench coat with a shotgun hidden under it. The bulkiness of the gun is causing his staggering walk.

Empathy 15+

He has a dark focus to his eyes, a murderous intent.

Combat breaks out. The hitman's first target is Sal. Anyone who didn't roll a 15+ on their notice or empathy roll (and Sal) take a -5 penalty to their initiative force roll.

After the fight...

There are a few ways to handle the fight, they can take the man head-on, and render him dead or knocked out, or they can attempt to flee in the car or by foot.

If they knock him out and speak to him after. He has no idea where he is or what he is doing with a shotgun. The last thing he remembers is smoking a cigar waiting to get into The Evening Underground.

ACT III: Unraveling the Conspiracy

Location 4: T.W. Savings and Loans

The lobby floor is an intricate geometric pattern of white and black marble. Oak wall panels extend halfway up the walls, topped by ornate plasterwork painted in a deep burgundy. The main counter spans the width of the room, featuring teller cages with polished brass and intricate grills.

Accessing the Safety Deposit Box requires the key. However a group with the right skill set could deceive their way in with a 17+ Guile roll. In order to break into the box without the key, it will require a 20+ Fix roll. If the group has the key from Luka's room however, they will be allowed in without question.

Contents of the Box:

- A large amount of Cash, $1,000 (would nearly $20,000 today)
- Incriminating documents against the Rossi and Fontana family (Mob activity, payoffs, etc.).
- Two Train Tickets to Atlantic City for a week from now.

Location 5: JUBILEE - OPIUM DEN

You walk into what appears to be a tailor shop. Once you enter, you see a heavy wooden door, unmarked and unassuming. As you step inside, you're met with a thick cloud of sweet, cloying smoke that stings your eyes. The air is thick and almost stagnant. The only lighting is the flickering, golden glow of opium lamps.

By speaking to the workers they can learn more. The workers are hesitant to divulge information, but can be convinced with a 15+ social roll, however intimidation is the most effective requiring only a roll of 10+. An empathy roll of 12+ can determine that intimidation is the best approach. If they succeed they learn the following:

- Vinnie and his crew had a serious habit and were here frequently.
- The rest of the crew are not happy about an Irish politician's daughter marrying into the family and secretly want to stop it.
- Vinnie isn't sure he wants to stay with the mob, looking for an out.
- Luka goes on and on about a woman that he is in love with, but it can never be. His family would never let it happen, but he is trying to find a way.
- Luka always acted kind of strange, almost pretending to be more high than he was.
- They would often be coming from The Evening Underground, a nearby speakeasy/jazz club.

They can also find an empty box of Blu Cigarillos with a Notice or Investigate roll of 15+

Location 6: THE EVENING UNDERGROUND

The speakeasy is empty and from the looks of it had just been cleaned, getting ready for the evening's reverie. The furniture is plush, the dark ebony tables are polished, and the amber lighting provides a sensual ambiance. In the very center is a stage. The walls are bathed in velvet. If you look closely enough, you can make out what looks like to be cutouts in the walls over the VIP section—enough to get the end of a shotgun out with a bit of room to aim.

The vibe in the place is uneasy. Word has gotten around fast regarding the murder, and the connection to the speakeasy. Though most of the decorations have already been taken down, a Notice roll of 12+ will allow them to see some 'just married' banners that got missed.

Key NPCs:

Lacey: Bitter Cigarette Girl. She is bitter because Sapphire gets more attention and gets to sell the premium tobacco, Blu brand. Vinnie was the big fish, Luka was falling all over Sapphire, but she only had eyes for Vinnie. She knows Sapphire is in the back, but would need some convincing to allow the group to get to the back. A social roll of 15+ will do the trick, however appealing to her jealousy will reduce the difficulty to 10+.

Dino: Manager, Mob affiliated. He won't believe that Luka did this. He was preparing for the after-party that never showed up.

Sapphire: Hypnotist/Singer:

Sapphire's Objective: To leave, go to the bank (T&W), get the money (from the safety deposit box she also had access to), and get out. She will lie, hypnotize (remember that this requires someone to willingly focus on her for 10 minutes). She will do whatever she can to achieve her goals of getting to the bank and out of town.

If cornered or stopped while inside the bar: She will yell, "You'll never take me alive."

If she yells the phrase...

Dino and several patrons get that glassy look in their eyes. Dino grabs the shotgun he keeps behind the bar, and the patrons draw pistols.

The Encounter

There are a few moving parts if Sapphire is able to get her hypnotized goons to fight the party. By now the party will know that these are essentially innocent victims, but they are providing legitimate threat. Meanwhile Sapphire has no interesting in staying and fighting, she is trying to escape. The two hypnotized patrons draw pistols. They have 3 in all attributes and one dot in all skills and pistols. They will not spend energy on the fight.

Dino is the real threat with his shotgun, however underneath he is fighting the urge to fight innocents. Before each of his turns he will make a difficulty 15 force roll to gain control of his actions. If anyone takes any action to try to appeal to him, he gets a +5 bonus to this roll. An Empathy roll of 20+ will allow someone to realize Dino is trying to fight the hypnosis.

Finale

After the smoke clears and everything is done, the party heads back to the Rossi mansion. They are quickly ushered into Giovanni's study, where the Don sits behind his desk with a few men around him. Seeing The Party, The Don dismisses his men with a wave of his hand. He leans back smoking his cigar waiting for the party's report.

The party is free to explain the events to the Don in whatever way they prefer, including or excluding as much as they want.

If they are totally honest and include that Luka was hypnotized...

Giovanni doesn't even blink. He just leans back in his chair, shaking his head and muttering, "I knew it. Not about the Bird, but I knew it wasn't in Luka's control." The Party can see a look of relief for a moment then grief. Distraught but decisive, Giovanni makes the call to spirit Luka out of town and bury his son in private.

Regardless, with the job done and the truth told and buried, the party walks away with their debts wiped clean.

NPC DECK

Samantha "Sapphire" Owens

Seductive songbird of The Evening Underground, a singer with the literal power to hold a crowd and their minds in the palm of her hand. When she is not singing she is the club's VIP Cigarette Girl. She originally set her sights on Vinnie, but when his mental defenses proved too strong, she pivoted to Luka, quickly turning him into a puppet who followed her every command. Under her trance, Luka spent months draining his father's safes and gathering "getaway" cash, fueled by the delusion that they were running away to start a new life together. But Sapphire's true agenda was much darker. She implanted a psychic trigger in Luka's mind, and with a single phrase, she turned the devoted brother into a mindless assassin who gunned down Vinnie at the altar.

DeAngelo "Dino" Lombardi

The lead bartender and opening stocker who's basically part of the furniture at the speakeasy. He works every single shift Sapphire performs, making him her most reliable set of eyes and ears on the floor. He is mesmerized when it comes to Sapphire. All it takes is one look and a few choice words from her to turn him into a loyal dog who'll do whatever she wants. Whether he's slipping a secret note, spiking a mark's drink, or just playing lookout while she works her magic on the Outfit's heavy hitters, Dino is the quiet unwitting accomplice making sure her game runs smoothly.

Giovanni 'The Suit' Rossi

The Mob Boss for The Chicago Outfit. Some would argue the most notorious man in the United States, but right now, he's a man obsessed with the truth. While it is apparent Luka gunned down Giovanni's son, Vinnie, in cold blood, to Giovanni, the whole thing is preposterous. Seeing as the boys were closer than brothers born minutes apart at the same hospital. He's convinced some kind of dark, supernatural "unseen force" is actually behind the hit, but he can't exactly send his mob hitters out to go "ghost hunting" without looking like he's lost his marbles. The Party are all buried under debts they can't pay, he's calling in his markers to make you his investigators to find out what really happened.

Carmelo 'The Fixer' Fontana

Consigliere to Giovanni, the brains of the Outfit, but his world tanked the second he saw his son, Luka, open fire in a church full of people killing his best friend/ brother He and Giovanni spent years keeping their boys away from the family's dirty work, so the idea of Luka being a cold blooded hitman just doesn't compute. Carmelo is the reason Luka is currently rotting in a cell. He's intentionally stalling the bail process because, as "The Fixer," he knows the clink is the only place his son is safe from whatever dark force caused the murder. While Giovanni pursues spirits, Carmelo is working the angles of the living world, desperate to find a shred of evidence that can save his son from a life sentence or a shallow grave.

Salvador D'Alonzo aka 'Silent Sal'

Giovanni's top trigger pull and the guy you call when you want a problem to disappear without a sound. He earned his name because he doesn't talk, doesn't question, and definitely doesn't gossip, not even about a church shooting that shocked the whole city Sal was there, but he doesn't care about the "why" or whether Luka was possessed or just went rogue. His only job is to be the shadow behind the party Giovanni has assembled and ready to crack skulls or erase lives if needed. He's a stone cold professional who stays out of the family drama, making him the most dangerous man in the room because he's just waiting for the order to end it.

Siobhan Fitzgerald

Bride wife for only a moment, a widow the next. Siobhan met Vinnie and Luka during a charity ball. They were weary of each other but love won out. Siobhan was often seen with both Luka and Vinnie, once their prospective in laws knew. Siobhan's influence on Vinnie helped him stay on the straight and narrow. Because she was constantly seen with both Vinnie and Luka, she knew their bond better than anyone, which makes the sight of Luka opening fire in that church an impossible nightmare to reconcile. Like everyone she is trying to process what happened in the church and why someone that she and Vinnie both love as a brother viciously gunned her beloved down.

Luka Fontana

Gunman - "the "brother" who would have died for Vinnie, born just minutes apart and inseparable since the nursery. While Luka naturally gravitated toward the underworld, he played the role of Vinnie's human shield, aggressively pushing his best friend to finish law school and cheering when Siobhan's love finally pulled Vinnie away from the Outfit for good. This makes his current reality an absolute hell. He fell under the literal spell of a mysterious woman named Sapphire, becoming a helpless puppet while she pulled the strings. Now, he sits in a jail cell in a total mental fog, haunted by the news of Vinnie's death but possessing no memory of pulling the trigger or knowing his paramour orchestrated the whole tragedy.

Lacey Higgins

A fixture at The Evening Underground since the doors opened, originally ruling the floor as the VIP Candy Girl who catered exclusively to the high rollers with premium cigars. That all changed the moment Sapphire stepped onto the stage; now, Lacey's been demoted to working the general crowd like a rookie, peddling cheap smokes to customers. She's particularly bitter about the weird new rules. Even when she's back in the VIP section, when Sapphire is on stage she is strictly forbidden from peddling "Blu Cigarettes." A unique brand that has become a Sapphire exclusive.

PREGEN CHARACTERS

This one shot adventure is written with 3-5 characters each at (or around) 25 experience. The following pages feature six such characters to choose from. Each one also includes the reason why they owe a favor or two to mob.

Of course this adventure can also be used within a larger story featuring extant characters, or be played with player created characters within the context of the one shot. In either case, the characters should still have a reason why they owe mob something. If you plan to use this in a larger story, have Chicago Outfit get the group out of a bind sometime before using this!

Journal

Frances Wright discovered early that she could talk anyone into anything/ This talent made her a natural reporter. But when her sharp tongue crossed the line during interviews, she was demoted to the "jazz journalism" beat. Now, she's pinning her hopes on an exposé of Chicago's "Wedding of the Decade." If she can't find the truth, she'll settle for the dirt, so long as it fuels her comeback.

Genevieve spends her shifts pouring coffee, but she keeps her ears open whenever mobsters, cops, or journalists talk shop in her back booth. She makes extra cash on the side by selling whatever secrets she hears to the O'Neill Gang. Most customers just see a waitress, making it easy for her to play dumb. It's a dangerous hustle, but she's determined to keep the info flowing as long as the money is good.

Leo began his career wanting to do right by Chicago, but he quickly traded his morals for bribes. He's tired of walking a beat and realizes his ties to the mob are his best ticket to a promotion. He's ready to double-cross the precinct or bury a major investigation to prove his worth to the Outfit. By playing the hero for his criminal bosses, he expects them to pull the right strings and secure his gold shield.

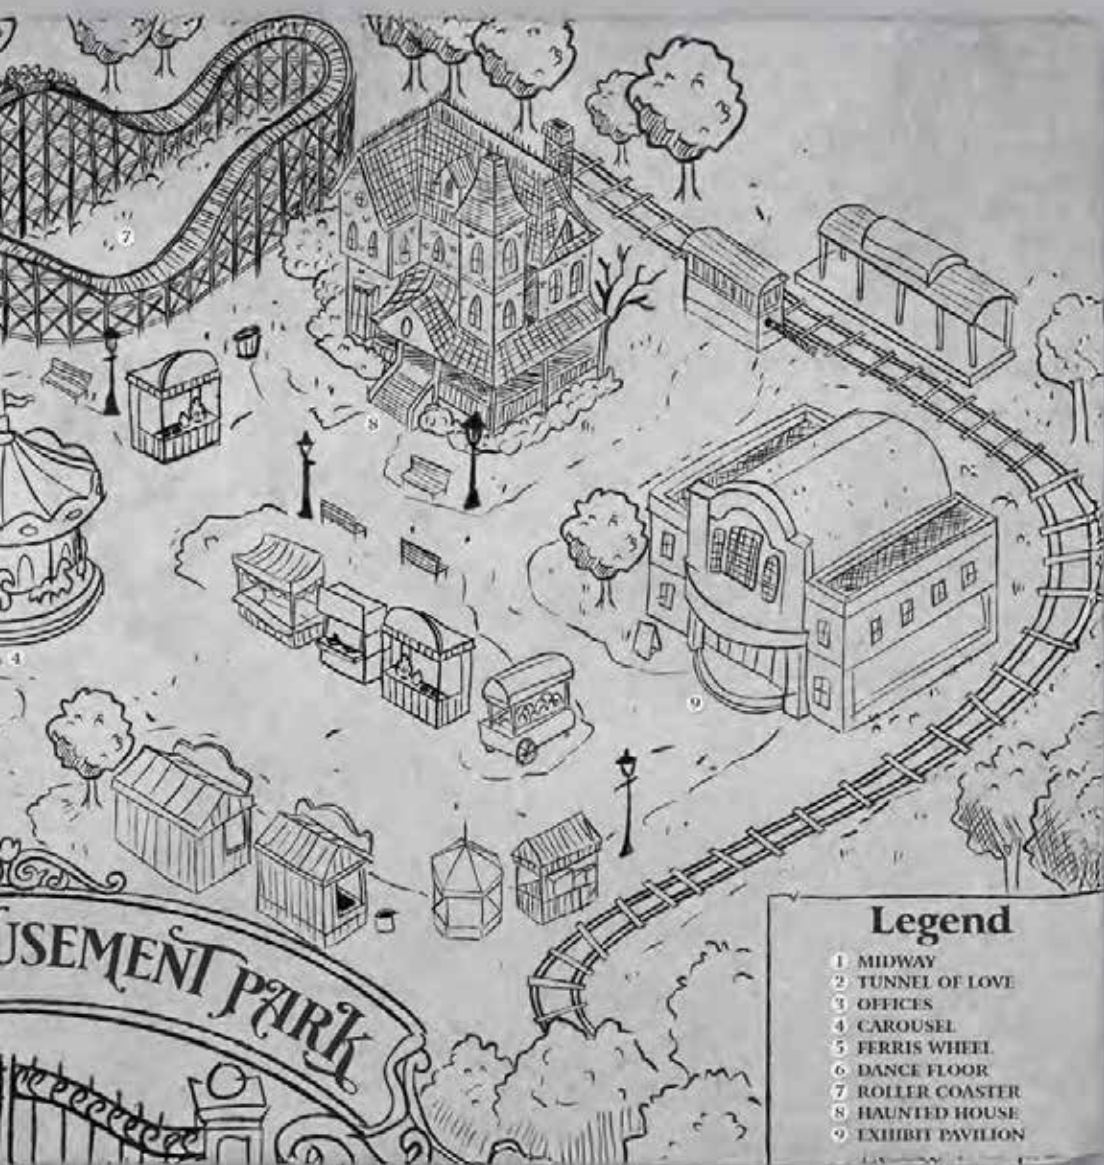

THEM'S GRAVEYARD WORDS

*"We can't command our love, but we can our actions."
-Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes*

In Chicago during the Roaring Twenties, you could take it to the bank that the mob's shadow was a dark horse creepin' under all the bright lights and gaiety. But, get this, that wasn't the straight story at all. For the average Joe and his nest, there was only one place: Chi-Town Amusement Park. This safe haven, on the level and free of strife, was the bee's knees, offerin' a full day of thrilling rides and carnival games for a small ticket price. Visitors could slang a hash of hot dogs, popcorn, and candied apples while tryin' to snag prizes, from classic trinkets like Kewpie Dolls and tin noisemakers to keen household goods. Ambrose Burkett, the park's Black owner, was a square shooter who earned universal respect because he was apolitical and fair. His remarkable knack for squashing beefs, preventin' both mob rough stuff and the law's aggression, made the park more than just neutral ground. It was absolutely revered, like sacred territory, right up there with St. Augustine's Church. Ambrose and his wife, Mabel, were "A-one" folks, always charitable and kind. They weren't just lookin' at the ceiling; they were on the spot, feeding the folks in despair and workin' to find, or outright creatin', gigs for people just tryin' to keep their heads above water. They were the real McCoy. It comes as no shock that you folks owe him a favor or two. The kicker here is Ambrose never asks for a favor; he's not one to take the cake. If he's givin' you the nod, you know it's a big deal. You get a letter from Ambrose "Greetings, old sport! I need to get a wiggle on to see you. You think you can come by the park tonight?" What else can you do but say yes. Ambrose calls you for the first time ever, you answer.

One Shot Synopsis

At the Chi-Town Amusement Park, players are hired to investigate nocturnal disturbances ranging from exploding light bulbs to phantom giggles. As the investigation unfolds, the players discover that the park is gripped by a supernatural loop fueled by a tragic "Jazz-Age" murder that occurred years ago on the park's band stand dance floor.

The haunting centers on Tony and Lila, two former park workers and orphans whose lives ended in a violent act of jealousy. Tony was gunned down by a rival suitor, Nico, before he could propose, and Lila followed him to the grave shortly after. A grieving adoptive mother, Mabel Burkett used her psychic abilities to summon ghosts, inadvertently leaving their spirits tethered to the amusement park. Their spirits are unable to move on because Tony needs Lila to have his engagement ring, achieving this will break the cycle and release the spirits.

To resolve this mysterious adventure, the players must go to Tunnel of Love to find the engagement ring hidden away in a tree. Whether within the family burial plot or within the park the players must assist in getting Tony's engagement ring into Lila's possession, assisting in breaking the tragic loop these ghosts are trapped within. Once Tony knows that Lila has his ring, the two lovers find peace and depart the park together.

Chapter One:

The party meets Ambrose, who gives them their objective. Some clues can be found by pushing him socially or noticing things in his office.

Chapter Two:

The Party explores the park, searching for clues. This is the meat of the mystery, they must use social skills, perceptive eyes, and deduction to start to piece together what is happening here.

Chapter Three:

The party definitely learns the history of the park, and Mabel's accidental haunting therein.

Chapter Four:

The party sets the spirits to rest, utilizing Tony's engagement ring.

ACT I: Amusement Park Entrance

Scene 1.1: The Electric Invitation

Setting: The Amusement Park Entrance.

The Scene: The party meets, introduces themselves, and establishes their connection to Ambrose Burkett (a mentor, a benefactor, a respected figure).

The sign above reads "Chi-Town Amusement Park" sign blazes with a thousand chaser lights. The smell of old hot dogs and stale popcorn hangs in the cool night air. The gates are locked tight, clam-mouthed. Looking through the gate you see Ambrose approaching. Ambrose arrives. He's a tall, hulking man whose size comes from park maintenance. With a smile that is genuinely disarming he shakes their hands, locks the gate behind them, and ushers them in, leading them to his office.

Scene 1.2: The Private Office

Ambrose's office is a small, impeccably clean office near the miniature grand basin. Looking around you see the walls are covered with posters of past events and photos of guests at the park. Some of them look to be employees. Working, smiling into the camera

"Thank you guys for coming. You're doing me a good turn... Things have been screwy around here. Only at night though nothing dangerous. Just some things giving me the heebie-jeebies... I ain't opening the joint if folks can't come here and everything is not copacetic."

Further information that Ambrose might provide (if asked):

- Lights suddenly popping (not fuses, just bursting bulbs).
- Chairs overturned with no wind.
- Giggles or faint music, but no one is there.
- Rides randomly starting up.
- Ambrose believes it's either kids messing around or someone who resents the amusement park being neutral ground.

On a closer look All this comes with a difficulty 12 notice roll:

- The walls are covered in photographs and posters. There seem to be several of one couple. They look happy and in love.
- Looking down you see a scrap of paper. The writing looks rushed. It reads: "Dad I got Maintenance, Felix got Mom duty." - O
- On the desk there is a pile of papers. On the bottom a tiny sliver of pink pokes out.

Smuggle could be rolled to pull the pink slip out of the stack subtly, if they don't want Ambrose to notice. This would be opposed by a notice roll from Ambrose.

Ambrose's Secrets

Ambrose is leaving details out but nothing that endangers the party. Ambrose is protecting someone (likely his family, Oliver or Felix).

Details Ambrose will provide if asked:

"O is my son Oliver. We have two boys. Felix is my youngest. My family opened the park and has run it ever since."

ACT II: Investigating the park

These can be investigated in any order

MIDWAY

- High Striker
- Milk Jug Toss
- Rusty

CAROUSEL

- Meet Oliver

TUNNEL OF LOVE

- Tunnel of Love

FERRIS WHEEL

- Trouble Maker

MIDWAY

The High Striker Malfunction

Location: The High Striker game booth.

Atmosphere: Lights around the numbers are on. The large mallet is chained down.

As you enter through open gates to the attractions and games you hear the distinct whiz of the dinger shooting up the track, followed by the clang of the bell, yet the mallet remains chained. The sound is immediately followed by the giggles of two children. Then the sound goes silent.

If Medium is activated:

You look over and see a little boy jumping up and down hard on the striking plate. Off to the side is a little girl laughing. The boy gets off the plate and the two run off holding hands. They vanish as they turn a corner.

Without medium they only see shadows move, maybe wind in the trees.

The Sleeping Witness: Rusty the Hobo

Difficulty 10 Notice to see him.

Location: Near a trash can/bench slightly off the main thoroughfare of the Midway.

As you walk through the park you hear a noise of someone fumbling around. You see a paranoid-looking hobo, taking a swig of hooch.

Rusty is a long time beneficiary of Ambrose's kindness. Ambrose lets him stay here when the fuzz clears the streets. He seems unreasonably nervous and looking around a lot. Paranoid.

If any of the spooky stuff is mentioned:

"You heard them. Yeah those them kids. They don't harm no one just playing around. Lots of kids used to come here. Ambrose always mentions two of them. Shame what happened."

If pressed about the incident:

Rusty scratches his head then shakes his head. "I didn't ask for the details. Got enough sad stories in my head over Normandy... I fought in the war. The doctors say I'm 'all there' due to a concussion."

If questioned about Ambrose:

"Ambrose is a swell guy but I have been trying to think of a way to tell him. He's got ghosts; they all seem harmless, except for that one." Rusty further explains he has only felt them watching him, never seen them.

When the group leaves Rusty rolls over and falls back asleep, impossible to wake immediately.

Milk Jug Toss

As you continue to walk through the park you see stalls with all the games you expect. Shooting Gallery, Ring Toss Darts, and a Milk Jugs Toss As you get close you see a pyramid of Milk Jugs. You watch as all the bottles go down, scattering everywhere.

Difficulty 10 Investigation:

As you approach you see a small bean bag lying on the back of the pyramid

After the group has time to look around for a moment:

Suddenly you all hear the faint sound of a woman laughing and clapping.

If Medium is activated:

There's a woman standing there to the side of the Milk Toss Game. She is clapping and looking at a man in front of the stand smiling with his arms crossed clearly pleased with himself.

Getting a good look at her you can tell it looks like the girl running around the park. Think back to when you were in Ambrose's office, you remember the girl in the photos. The one with the couple.

The Carousel

Meeting Oliver

Location: Polishing a railing near the Carousel

NPC: Oliver Burkett

As you approach you hear the sound of someone moving crates around. As you get closer you realize that it must be one of Ambrose's sons. You can tell he is earnestly dealing with the task at hand. The grease on his hand makes you feel like he's mechanically inclined. "You the folks Pops got to check things out? Looking for my Dad? He'll be back in a bit." He will introduce himself as Oliver.

Oliver is present because Ambrose is discreetly occupied. He tells the party, GM Note: Ambrose is likely meeting with Felix or checking on the concealed truth, continuing to protect the park's secrets.

When questioned about the strange events, Oliver dismisses them immediately:

"That's just a bunch of baloney! Every strange sound has a loose bolt, and every flickering light has a faulty wire. We're in the Golden Age of Electric Lighting; nobody's perfect. I'm tinkering with the High Striker now, it's got to be something in one of the mechanisms causing a resonant vibration, not anything supernatural."

Oliver is not actively lying. His belief in a mechanical failure is sincere, and his instinct about the faulty wiring is actually part of the ultimate solution. He is fiercely protective of his family and the park's reputation, making him a reluctant barrier to the truth.

Having just finished a maintenance check, Oliver gives the party a new task, a practical way for them to spend their time, which he believes is more valuable than ghost hunting.

Oliver looks at the lot of you as if sizing you up. Trying to figure out if you're scamming his Dad. He clears his throat and says. "Look, if Dad's paying you good money for something so ridiculous, you might as well get some work done. My next stop is the Tunnel of Love. Once I get there you can give it a whirl. Hopefully none of the boats get jammed up on the track"

If pressed Oliver will admit (He will roll deflect against social attempts to squeeze info out of him)

- His family believes in psychic abilities.
- He has heard about the FBI rounding up people, so he keeps it quiet.
- His parents have shielded all kinds of people by allowing them to roam through the park. This includes kids from the orphanage.

Ferris Wheel

Standing near the perimeter of the Ferris Wheel ride, the air heavy and quiet save for the hum of the generators in the park. Suddenly, you hear a distinct rustling sound coming from a dense clump of overgrown bushes just ahead as one of the Ferris Wheel lights shatters and pops.

As you come around the corner you see a scowling man holding a BB gun. Beside him is a crate with tools and 4 lanterns.

His first instinct will be to run away. He will roll athletics, as will anyone who wants to chase him down. Carrying the crate gives him a -5 penalty. Anyone who rolls higher than him will be able to catch him.

If the party is able to get him to open up about his motivations:

Who it is: Floyd Martin, ex-employee.

Motivation: Revenge on Ambrose and Ambrose’s son, ‘that little snitch’, Felix. He wants to hurt the reputation of the park and make sure to really scare Felix in the process.

Activities:

Retrieving Loot: He is here to grab the loot he stole and hid within the park, and maybe some other stuff while he is here.

Vandalism: Shooting out the Ferris Wheel lights.

“Haunting” Felix: He has been deliberately making the park seem haunted to scare Felix (Ambrose’s younger son, who reported him). His methods include:

- Knocking over stacks of cans.
- Stealthily starting rides that should be shut down.
- Flipping over upright chairs.

Items: BB gun (rifles, 3 damage, -0 resistance), crate with tools/lanterns.

The Tunnel of Love

Setting: The Tunnel of Love entrance.

You walk toward the entrance and see boats are designed with a large heart on the back so the boat behind the one you are in can't see what's going on with the boat in front of them.

If Oliver hasn't been here yet, it is locked with a big sign that says 'out of order' A difficulty 15 Fix roll can pick the lock, and a difficulty 20 Fix roll can get the ride to start.

Once inside...

The air around the ride feels damp, musky. There is a smell of old water and grease floating through the air. Suddenly you hear faint, tinny sentimental music that seems to be cutting in and out from the speakers.

During the ride...

The boat enters the tunnel, passing through the initial section of fake rock grottoes and mythical creatures. The tunnel opens up and you are surrounded in a gaudy, over-romantic scene. There's a small fountain toward the back where you see painted murals of cupids, and artificial flowers. The music seems especially loud. Suddenly the boat jams then unsticks itself. In the center of the grotto, beneath a sunlight is a large tree.

With a Difficulty 12 notice roll...

Hidden Graffiti. Near the jam point, a heart is faintly etched into the tree with "T + L" scrawled inside.

T and L are the initials of the two employees in the photo, Tony and Lila, who had carved their initials into the tree.

With a Difficulty 17 notice roll...

A glint of silver can be seen within a small hollow of the tree.

In order to get to the tree they must hop off the ride with a difficulty 10 Athletics roll (though the only penalty for failure is soggy socks and looking foolish). If they reach inside they find a small silver box. Inside the box is a small silver ring with an amethyst stone.

Up ahead you see a dark tunnel. The boat moves through a long, dark stretch, the sounds of a woman crying are heard, followed by a man's comforting shushing. A voice whispers clearly: "I'll keep you safe, I promise."

A difficulty 15 Notice or Empathy roll will indicate the voice is definitely not coming from the speakers.

The ride enters the standard "haunted house" section. Crude cardboard signs pop up saying "Boo" and "Yikes", providing mild, intentional scares. You feel a sudden, strange, scary sensation, a feeling as if someone is intensely glaring at them from the darkness. This is distinctly different from the gentle sadness of the couple.

Anyone with any psychic dots will feel the presence more strongly, becoming deeply unnerved despite the cornball scares in the tunnel.

If Medium is activated:

There is a man or shadow holding a gun looking distinctly sinister before the figure disappears. This figure is large, menacing, and utterly malevolent, unlike the playful children or the grieving couple

Doors open up and you see the night sky as the boat heads out through the part of the river that loops outside.

You hear and see someone rustling around the bushes by the Ferris Wheel

You see a young boy running around holding a flashlight. He points his flashlight toward the darkest parts of the park screaming, "Mom!" Suddenly you see Ambrose also holding a flashlight as well. He briefly looks at you, his concern for the whereabouts of his wife superseding everything else. Felix looks at his father shaking his head. "She probably at the dance floor."

Location: The Stage and Dance Floor

You follow Ambrose and Felix and see who appears to be Mabel Burkett sitting near the stall. You see her lean against the bar giggling and whispering as if she is talking to someone.

Mabel is dressed in an outfit that looks a bit ill-fitting and old. Her yellow dress looks dull. As you approach, she straightens the worn fascinator pimping the canary colored feather on her head. Ambrose seems resigned to this situation.

Ambrose stops dead in his tracks. He sees his wife then nudges at his son, implying Ambrose wants him to leave. Felix looks at his mom then opens his mouth to protest, then sighs and obeys his Dad, giving you all one last look before he takes off in the darkness. Mabel looks up, smiling completely with a glazed over look in her eyes. "How do I look? Samantha said he's going to propose tonight!"

Mabel looks toward the dance floor, the look on her face lets you know she's terrified. Jumping up from her seat she screams, and runs to the center of the dance floor, dropping to her knees, weeping over an invisible body. She hovers over the floor then moves her arms around looking as if she's cradling someone. She weeps and yells, "Tony, no! Please don't leave me."

Mabel faints. Ambrose catches her before she can hit her head against the floor. He looks at everyone and sighs, "Meet me back in my office. I'm gonna set Mabel to rights." You watched as Ambrose fireman-carries his wife toward the entrance of the park.

ACT III: The Truth Revealed

The party returns to Ambrose's office following the intense scene at the dance floor.

Oliver is there, placing a wooden crate on the desk. He points toward the crate. "Pops says take a look at what's in here."

The Contents of the Crate

Looking in the crate you can see it holds clues to the park's haunting, linking the ghosts, the family, and the tragedy.

Photos:

- A picture of Ambrose kneeling down next to two kids. (Lila and Tony as children).
- A picture of the adoring couple staring at each other (Tony and Lila).
- Personal Items:
- A men's wallet.
- A pair of woman's gloves.
- Newspaper Evidence

If someone searches the crate:

Reaching into the crate you see a tattered newspaper sitting at the bottom of it. It's a clipping detailing the park's tragedy:

MIDNIGHT CARNAGE AT CHI-TOWN PARK!
PASSION PAYS IN BLOOD: JEALOUSY ENDS
ROMANCE AT GRAND DANCE FLOOR

Chi-Town Amusement Park, Oct. 17. The roar of the crowd and the lively blare of the jazz band were tragically silenced last night as a sordid affair of the heart exploded into cold-blooded murder at the popular lakeside pleasure ground.

Patrons fled in terror as Anthony Barry, a young man well known around the park, fell victim to the deadly obsession of a rival suitor. The assailant, identified by authorities as Nico Bianchi, was killed by local law enforcement as they tried to take him into custody following the murderous incident.

According to initial police reports from the 8th Precinct, the savage altercation appears to have been fueled entirely by Mr. Bianchi's maddening, unrequited affections for Miss Lila McMillian, Mr. Barry's known paramour. It is suggested that Bianchi could no longer endure the sight of the happy couple, choosing to settle the romantic rivalry with a pistol rather than reason.

This shocking episode casts a pall upon the otherwise glittering façade of Chi-Town Park, proving once again that even under the brightest electric lights, the dark forces of jealousy and violent passion hold sway over the human heart. Further details are forthcoming as detectives continue their investigation into this bloody, jazz-age tragedy.

Mabel's Confession and the Loop

Ambrose re-enters the office with a newly lucid Mabel, who has changed out of her flapper frock. She looks embarrassed. Ambrose guides her to sit and nods to you. "Mabel here, well she's got empathy that gets the better of her. I was not sure it was her gift or if it was Mabel grieving, having lost two kids she loved like her own."

Mabel looks up at all of you. She gulps, apologizing profusely: "Like Ambrose said, 'I have certain talents'. We don't talk about it. Oliver says it's all baloney."

Ambrose pulls out a picture of Tony and Lila sliding it across the desk toward you. "Their names are Lila and Tony. They lost their parents young. They would sneak out of the orphanage and come here. Later when they got older they got jobs here. Tony did just about everything. Lila worked the events."

Mabel says Lila was devastated. She passed a few weeks later. She was killed when she walked the train tracks a few weeks after Tony's murder. We still don't know if it was an accident or intentional. We didn't know what to do so we buried them in our family's plot.

Mabel looks down shaking her head. "At first I just wanted to talk to Lila then, well, you saw what happened, started happening. I reckon all three of them are stuck, trapped in a loop of the tragic night."

If Ambrose is pushed as to why he didn't tell the party he is married to a quite powerful medium, he would give this excuse.

"I didn't tell you any of this because my son Oliver said it will just make you see the things even though they are not there. Said something about 'confirmation bias...' I'm sorry for not being straight."

ACT IV: The Resolution

Part One: The Root Cause

Focus: The goal shifts back to the dance floor, the core of the loop.
The Agitation:

Mabel or a character with enough dots of Medium tries to summon Tony to communicate.

Tony shows up and is agitated; he seems to be searching for Lila. He looks around frantically, repeating over and over again: "I need to find Lila! Got the ring all set up. She's supposed to meet me after work. I ain't leaving till I give her the ring!"

Tony's spectral presence won't rest because he was killed before he could propose. He "can't find the ring and give it to Lila."

Part Two: The Proposal Plan

Investigation: The party must ask Ambrose, Felix, or Oliver (if he finally admits the tragedy) if they knew how Tony planned to propose.

"Tony was so excited. He was going to do it in the Tunnel of Love. The ride operator was going to stop the boat directly in front of the big tree, Tony could do it there."

Part Three: Finding the Ring

The party must return to the Tunnel of Love if they didn't acquire the ring in chapter 2. They must search the area around the "T + L" graffiti now that they know where to look the notice roll will only determine how long it takes. 15 or higher they find it almost instantly, any lower and it takes a few minutes of searching.

You notice a hollow in the tree. As you peer into it you see a glimmer of silver. You find a small silver box inside. When you open it, you see a small silver ring with an amethyst stone.

Final Requirement: The party determines the ring needs to be buried with Lila in the family plot.

Finale

Breaking the Loop

The party must now engineer a way for Lila to receive Tony's ring. There are a few ways to do this and you should allow your players to come up with creative solutions. But Mabel will suggest burying the ring with Lila if the party doesn't have any ideas.

If they head to the graveyard, the events unfold.

In the Burkett Family Plot. The party would feel A malevolent atmosphere is felt as soon as Mabel starts to connect with Tony.

The Burkett Family plot was small. It has an ornate, cast iron low fence around it. Mabel walks towards Lila's grave.

An object close by mysteriously floats in the air and looks as if it is going to attack Mabel. The party could correctly deduce that it is Nico still attempting to prevent the engagement, even after death and must try to protect Mabel. This can be done by using force (difficulty 12) to wrestle the shovel away, deflect to block the attacks (difficulty 14), or any other creative solutions. Medium to speak to Nico, Suggestion to force him to leave, or performance to distract him are some other potential ways to protect Mable.

Climax: When the ring is buried with Lila the atmosphere instantly clears.

Just as you put the last of the dirt over the ring, spectral appearances of Lila and Tony appear at the grave. They seem oblivious to your presence. Tony places the ring on Lila's finger and kisses her hand. They take each other's hands and walk away together, Lila giggling happily, finally free.

NPC DECK

Ambrose Burkett

The park owner. He is a tall, physically imposing Black man whose size comes from park maintenance, and he is genuinely disarming and is truly altruistic. Ambrose is protecting his family and the park's reputation, deliberately withholding the truth that the haunting is tied to a violent tragedy involving Lila and Tony, two young people he and Mabel raised like their own children.

Mabel Burkett

Ambrose's wife. She is a psychic medium with "certain talents" who, in her grief, sought to contact the spirits of Lila and Tony, inadvertently trapping them and the murderer, Nico, in a tragic loop and Tony frantically searching for Lila. When the party encounters her later, she is dressed in an ill-fitting, old yellow flapper frock, stuck in a delusion where she relives the night of the murder on the dance floor.

Oliver Burkett

Ambrose's older son, the Skeptic and head of maintenance and has an especially mechanical mind. He is earnest and dedicated. He immediately dismisses all strange events as faulty wiring or loose bolts, believing every flickering light has a logical, physical explanation. He firmly believes his mother is just grieving and needs professional help. He will not acknowledge what's going on with his mother. He is irritated they are there feeding into the fantasy. Oliver is fiercely protective of his family and the park. He tries to redirect the party by giving them a practical maintenance task in the Tunnel of Love.

Felix Burkett

Ambrose's youngest son. He appears worried and active, assisting his father in managing Mabel's episodes. He is seen with a flashlight searching for his mother and directs the party to the dance floor, signaling his awareness of his mother's delusion. Unlike Oliver, Felix firmly believes what his parents told him. He is nervous and apologetic to the party, trying to apologize and protect his mother at the same time.

EXPERIENCE 15

Rusty

Paranoid-looking drunken man, a vagrant. He has no doubt in the existence of an afterlife and spirits. He counts on Ambrose's kindness, allowing him to stay on the grounds. He confirms the presence of the gentle "kids" (Lila and Tony's ghosts) and, most importantly, admits to sensing a separate, sinister malevolent entity. He uses his World War I trauma, Normandy, as an excuse not to remember details, though he is lucid enough to know Ambrose has ghosts.

The Spectral Figures

Lila McMillian

Lila and Tony grew up together, becoming surrogate children for the Burketts. Tony has watched and cared for entire life. She is killed tragically by a train hitting her as she walked on the tracks. The younger version of her is seen because it reminds them both of happier times.

Anthony "Tony" Barry

Lila's would-be fiancé. He was killed by jealousy. Tony's spirit is unable to rest because he was killed before he could propose, and he is trapped searching for Lila and the engagement ring.

Nico Bianchi

A jealous man with an infatuation for Lila that rose to murderous intent when learning of Tony's intent to propose. Rather than let the happy couple live their life, he decided to kill his romantic rival. He killed shortly after by the police as they attempted to apprehend him. Mabel inadvertently brought his spirit back too, as his story is so deeply entwined with theres. Completing their story also releases his spirit from the park, though likely not going to a happy place after. He has violent, malevolent energy that exudes from him. It is unclear if his motivation is because he is still obsessed with Lila or because his actions got him stuck in the loop.

Pregen Characters

This one shot adventure is written with 3-5 characters each at (or around) 25 experience. The following pages feature six such characters to choose from. Each one also includes the reason why they owe Ambrose one.

Of course this adventure can also be used within a larger story featuring extant characters, or be played with player created characters within the context of the one shot. In either case, the characters should still have a reason why they owe Ambrose something. If you plan to use this in a larger story, have Ambrose get the group out of a bind sometime before using this!

Nick works the crowd with a three-card monte hustle. He's nearly flawless when it comes to the con. Until one day a couple of marks realized they'd been cleaned. Just as the circle closed in and fists started flying, Ambrose saw what was happening and stepped in to stop the fight. Ambrose did not judge him instead let him go urging him to find a better way to make ends meet.

Sheppard Anderson hauls freight and smuggles for the O'Neill Gang, his nerves frayed thinking every shadow is a ghost that he can see and hear for a blip. A mugging left him bleeding and robbed on his week's wages, Ambrose found him and Mabel nursed him back to health. On top of that they covered what was taken. Sheppard is trying to find a way to repay their kindness.
